

Grand Design In Far North

Bennett's Canary Gulps Ottawa's Cat—Again

By IAN STREET
Legislature Reporter

The smile on the face of Premier Bennett tells most of the story. The provincial canary once more has swallowed the federal cat.

The rest is written in the confident tilt of the jaw, the thrust of his shoulders as he sits comfortably behind the big desk in the premier's office. Some canary!

Nothing is said for the record, of course, but the message is clear.

Those foolish federal bureaucrats and politicians have been caught sleeping at the switch. Again.

It's becoming almost notorious. But, pleasant as this prospect is to dwell on, there is always an underlying sense of frustration.

B.C. — thanks mainly to the foresight of Bennett — has come up with a grand design for northern development. But it can't be carried out without Ottawa's co-operation, for good reason.

This plan includes not only the entire northern half of B.C. but the Yukon and

Bombs Protest Convict Shooting

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Two State Department of Corrections offices in San Francisco and Sacramento were heavily damaged by bombs Saturday in what an underground group said was "one outraged response to the assassination of George Jackson."

A third bomb explosion wrecked the State Department of Rehabilitation office in San Mateo. Investigators said the San Mateo blast did not appear related to the seemingly co-ordinated attacks on the two prison systems.

There were no injuries. Soledad Brother George Jackson was killed with five other men in a San Quentin Prison break attempt a week ago.

The bombings came on the day of Jackson's funeral in the same wooden church in Oakland where rites were conducted a year ago for his younger brother, Jonathan. Jonathan was killed in the August, 1970, Marin County Courthouse shootout in which a judge and three auditors died.

A letter, signed "Weather Underground" and delivered to the San Francisco Examiner, claimed responsibility.

Cariboo's Ralph Dean New B.C. Archbishop

Ralph Dean, Bishop of the Cariboo, Saturday night was elected Archbishop of the Anglican Church for British Columbia and the Yukon.

It is the church's top post in the vast area.

Dean, one of six bishops eligible for the job, was elected in Vancouver on the first ballot. The election was made necessary by the retirement July 1 of Archbishop Godfrey Gower.

In the past votes have been cast only by the bishops. This marked the first time that other clergy and lay people had an equal say in the outcome. About 18 votes were cast.

Dean will be installed as archbishop Oct. 20 at his own church, St. Paul's Cathedral in Kamloops.

Death Toll Between 70, 95

BRINDISI, Italy (AP) — A raging fire on a giant Greek ferryboat drove more than 1,000 persons overboard Saturday off southeast Italy. Between 70 and 95 were reported dead or missing after the tourist-packed vessel was abandoned.

Awakened at dawn, many panicked passengers leaped into the Adriatic Sea in their night-clothes. The fire began with an explosion of natural gas in the kitchen of the 11,232-ton Heleanna, called "the largest ferry in the world" by its owners.

The Italian navy reported 34 bodies were recovered and 37 persons were missing. The port authority at Brindisi had differing figures — 25 bodies found and 70 persons missing.

The Navy Ministry in Rome reported that navy and merchant ships and dozens of small fishing boats rescued 1,086 persons.

The ministry said 320 persons were hospitalized, 64 with "rather serious" injuries. Most of the injured suffered burns or bone fractures.

Most of the passengers were said to be Italian, Greek, German, French or Swiss.

The ship owner and the Greek Merchant Marine declined to release a passenger list until names could be checked with survivors in Italy.

Owner of the ferry is C. S. Erythriades, known as Greece's "ferryboat king."

Ziggy's Coming Out Goes Off Smoothly

CHICAGO (UPI) — Brookfield Zoo threw a coming out party Saturday for a mean-spirited, wrinkled and somewhat looking elephant with one broken tusk.

For Ziggy the event signalled the end of 30 years of solitary confinement. For hundreds of well-wishers and zoo officials it was the happy culmination of three years of raising funds to try to solve Ziggy's predicament. Ziggy seemed unimpressed by their enthusiasm.

He was chained in a cage inside the zoo's pachyderm house after he attacked a keeper in 1941.

Ziggy walked out into the

Nanaimo Fire Rages Away

Loss: $500,000

NANAIMO — Fire gutted a two-storey building in downtown Nanaimo Saturday night in a spectacular blaze which could run damage costs up to $500,000.

Huge palls of dense black smoke rose hundreds of feet into the evening sky as 40 firemen fought to save three businesses which share the building.

After four hours the blaze was under control but damage to Edwards Tire, Hank's Bicycle Shop and the weekly newspaper, the Nanaimo Times, was expected to total about $500,000.

The fire broke out in Edwards Tire at about 6:15 p.m. and spread from the company's Terminal Avenue frontage up to the bicycle shop which faces Wallace Street. The Times, next door to the bicycle shop, was the last to fall to the fire.

Nanaimo fire chief Albert Dunn said it was the worst fire in the city in 10 years.

A crowd of about 4,000 on-lookers hampered police as people continually surged toward the flames, despite the threat of the building collapsing.

Several minor explosions rocked the building as the fire reached chemicals in the tire factory but no one was hurt.

After battling the blaze for about four hours, firemen had it under control.

Several weary firemen had lucky escape from injury when a huge neon sign crashed through the roof of the building to the floor below. The firemen, fighting the flames on the lower Terminal Avenue level, scrambled to safety after shouting warnings from others.

At 10:15 p.m., Chief Dunn said the fire was under control but his men would be staying on the scene all night.

"It's a dirty one. Hundreds and hundreds and hundreds of tires are still burning in the building," he said.

Dunn said he did not know the cause of the blaze.

It is understood that firemen reached the burning building before an alarm was raised. Several firemen saw the black smoke rising from the building as they rested at the fire station six blocks away.

They alerted other fire crews and went to the blaze.

Soon after the start of the fire, RCMP closed Terminal Avenue — which is also part of the Trans-Canada Highway — and rerouted traffic.

By 10 p.m., the street was awash with water from the fire.

France Cancels Nuclear Tests

PAPEETE, Tahiti (UPI) — France will not explode any more nuclear devices in the Pacific this year, defence sources said Saturday.

The sources said the thermonuclear blast over Mururoa Atoll southeast of here Aug. 15 satisfied scientists that no further explosions in their 1971 program were now necessary.

Ilyushin Crashes Into Sea; 31 Dead

COPENHAGEN (UPI) — A Hungarian Ilyushin 18 airliner with 34 passengers and crew members aboard crashed into the sea off Copenhagen Saturday night, one minute before it was to land at Kastrup airport.

The plane was found by a helicopter about one hour after the crash. The pilot located the badly damaged airliner near the island of Salt-holm. The pilot reported one of the wings had been torn off and was floating nearby while the tail showed above the water.

Bus Plunge Kills 23

DURBAN, South Africa (UPI) — A crowded African bus plunged off a bridge over a freeway Saturday killing 23 persons and injuring 64 others.

Police said the bus was going to nearby Umhlati, an African area, when it crashed through a safety barrier and fell about 30 feet onto a car and a truck driving on the South Coast Freeway. One occupant of the truck was killed.

Three Brothers Shot To Death

DRIGGS, Idaho (AP) — Three teen-aged brothers were shot to death and a relative and a city marshal seriously wounded early Saturday on a county road in an isolated section of eastern Idaho.

Teton County Sheriff Arden Stevens said Ruben DeLuna, 19; Robert DeLuna, Jr., 16; and Antonio DeLuna, 17, were killed as they sat in the family car. A cousin, Richard DeLuna, 19, was hospitalized.

Driggs City Marshal Melvin Jones, 38, was shot without warning seconds after he arrived at the scene of the shooting. He was in fair condition following surgery.

Stevens said he had a young man and woman in custody.

He said the DeLuna car was parked when someone opened fire, killing the three youths. Richard DeLuna was shot in the head, but managed to run to a telephone.

Deputy Marshal Daryl Zohner and Dr. Kitchner Head, a Driggs physician, arrived and hit the gunman over the head in the dark.

Cong's Rockets Fizzle —South Vietnam Votes

SAIGON (UPI) — President Nguyen Van Thieu voted in South Vietnam's first National Assembly elections since 1967 today and let it be known that the presidential elections will be held Oct. 5 with him as the only candidate.

Communists fired two rockets early today at Saigon's Tan Son Nhut airport, but the explosives failed to fire and caused no casualties or damage.

Gordie Hunter No Relation

THIS WAS to have been the second in a series of articles on the redevelopment plans for our inner harbor area, but inasmuch as the new Reid proposal was not presented until after my writing deadline, I will reserve judgment until after a study of the plans.

In the meantime, I would like to make it perfectly clear that I have no living relatives by the name of Hunter in Canada. This is just to set the record straight that I am in no way related to Toronto sociologist David Hunter, a member of the federal committee on youth, the committee which this week blared forth the proposal to legalize the sale of marijuana and hashish in our land.

THE COMMITTEE report states that the present laws have been ineffectual in controlling the drug problem and therefore, the junk should be made legal so as to get the authorities off the back.

The drug laws, if you'll study them closely, are not ineffectual.

Legalizing drugs, soft or hard, is the easy way out, the cop-out. The soft society, the lack of authority. The very reasons why young people have lost regard for authority. Make drugs legal, they lose more respect for law.

I think it safe to assume the second Le Dain report will be no less permissive than the federal youth committee report and that it too will make the same sick noises about marijuana legalization.

I have no relatives on that commission either.

I'M A SUCKER for unusual events — the out-of-the-ordinary happenings that deserve more publicity than they get. The Esquimalt and Port Angeles Lions Clubs have one set for Sept. 6 — a water ski race from Victoria to Port Angeles and return.

YOUR GOOD HEALTH

Sleuthing May Help Solve Skin Mystery

By G. C. THOMPSON, M.D.

Dear Dr. Thompson: For a year and a half I have had a skin infection on my left hand. The skin is dry, it cracks, peels and blisters, also itches like mad.

I have been to a dermatologist and had shots, cortisone tablets, and an antibiotic ointment. This helps, but the condition keeps recurring.

I am left-handed which could account for the infection on the left hand only. The dermatologist said it was nerves.

While laid off from work the condition cleared up. I'm a machinist and noticed just lately when I work with cast iron that has a strong odor of sulphur the condition gets worse. I think it was about a year and a half ago we started using this type of iron.

Others in the shop have the same condition on their hands at times. Could you suggest anything that might help? Ointment and gloves are out on this job. — C.D.

You're a good detective, I think. Your skin trouble has all the signs of being a contact dermatitis — a skin ailment due to contact with something or other.

Cases of contact dermatitis often are extremely difficult to identify because the causes can be such a variety of things: soap, dye, the paint on a broom handle, nickel-plated objects, and an endless list of others.

I would guess that you have not told your dermatologist about that different type of iron you are using but you very well may have the critical piece of information he needs to help you.

He evidently has tried remedies for the various kinds of skin disease that your case resembles; when your trouble keeps coming back, he suggests nerves.

But if you tell him about the new-type iron, and perhaps even give him some chips of the metal, it may well lead to solving your problem.

Salves and such may help a contact dermatitis somewhat, but the real answer, the permanent one, is to avoid contact with whatever the offending substance is.

Since other men in the shop are having similar trouble, I'd most certainly call it to your employer's attention. The sulphur smell may or may not mean anything — but some alloy in the iron, or something used in a pickling solution, could be the culprit.

With other men bothered as well, I dare say that the producer of the iron would like to correct the situation, too.

Berlin Accord Russians Promise No More Pressure

BERLIN (UPI) — Western diplomatic sources said Saturday the Russians in the Big Four agreement on Berlin promised to stop putting pressure on the city and threatening it.

The sources said this pledge, plus the Soviet promise of unimpeded traffic to West Berlin, could end the cold war that began here soon after the four-power occupation began in 1945.

The Big Four ambassadors were expected to sign the agreement this week, probably Thursday, at a ceremony in the former allied control authority building in the American sector, the sources said.

Then East and West German officials will work out details in talks expected to end before Christmas.

The Western sources said the Soviet pledge was contained in the following three provisions of the agreement:

● "The four powers will attempt to eliminate tension and prevent complications in the area under question."

● "The four governments agree that in recognition of their pledges under the charter of the United Nations there should be no threats or use of force in this area and that disputes should be settled by peaceful means."

● "The four powers will respect their individual and mutual rights and responsibilities which remain unchanged."

The sources said the four powers also pledged they would make no unilateral attempt to change the Berlin situation and they would hold four-power consultations if any of the four powers considered the agreement violated.

The sources said the Soviets would gain no new voice in West Berlin affairs, although the agreement grants the right to establish a consulate in West Berlin.

Greece Suddenly Drops Loyalty Oaths to Army

SALONIKA, Greece (AP) — Premier George Papadopoulos announced Saturday that Greek civilians will no longer be required to sign oaths of loyalty to the army-backed regime.

His surprise announcement said loyalty oaths would be required only of "the armed forces and the security corps."

By WILLIAM L. RYAN

(Associated Press)
An Australian economist who spent several months recently in China on a research mission says Mao Tse-tung has an economic "game plan" reflecting a high measure of confidence in China's technological future.

If this economist's conclusions are correct, it would appear that Mao has decided upon new heresies from text book Marxism-Leninism which will significantly widen the already yawning chasm between the Chinese and Soviet systems.

Chairman Mao's followers all along, however, have been unconcerned about Russian reaction as they developed their own brand of agrarian socialist revolution.

Bruce McFarlane, in the latest issue of the monthly Innovation, a journal devoted to technology, says Mao's current game plan involves a new challenge to the Kremlin. Soviet dogma says that in the development of a socialist economy, the priorities are heavy industry, light industry and agriculture, in that order, China, says McFarlane, intends to reverse the order.

Secondly, McFarlane writes, the Chinese leaders intend to halt further industrial development in the northwestern and central provinces and switch to industrial building along the coast. This would be an unmistakable sign that Peking has less to fear from the United States than from the Soviet Union and that the Russians occupy the role of No. 1 in the ranks of potential Peking enemies.

Yet another Mao move, says the article, will be to promote economic construction ahead of military expenditure.

"He proposes a policy that combines 'millet plus rifles' plus nuclear weapons rather than a policy of 'airplanes and big guns,' McFarlane writes. 'If this sounds puzzling, remember that China is less vulnerable to atomic weapons than Russia or the U.S.A., that big guns and airplanes would have to be built in prime target areas such as Anshan in northeast China.'

There are good reasons for a Chinese development based on agriculture. For one thing, China has far too big a labor force. The creation of jobs is far outrun by availability of labor. Development of an agrarian socialism would avoid transfer of labor on a large scale to the cities and thus also avoid the classic industrialization pattern of early 19th-century Europe, which proved painful.

Inquest to Probe Shooting of Chief

YELLOWKNIFE, N.W.T. (CP) — The coroner of the Northwest Territories has ordered an inquest into the death of Chief Ed Bird, who died Friday of wounds from bullets fired by a police revolver.

Dr. Max Cantor scheduled the inquest for Sept. 9 in Yellowknife.

Chief Bird, leader of the Fitz-Simith band of the Chipewyan People at Fort Smith, N.W.T., and Fitzgerald, Alta., was wounded by two bullets from a police revolver after the RCMP responded to a call to his home on Aug. 5.

He died in hospital in Edmonton.

An investigation into the shooting is being conducted by the crown attorney's office at Yellowknife.

Chief Bird was secretary-treasurer of the Indian Brotherhood of the N.W.T.

Hotel Lost In Blaze

SHERBROOKE, Que. (CP) — Firemen battled a three-alarm fire for nearly 2½ hours early Thursday at the 300-room New Wellington Hotel, then said it appeared to be a total loss. Damage is estimated at about $750,000.

BOSTON (UPI) — Tropical storm Doria weakened and moved into Canada Saturday evening, leaving flooded streets, uprooted trees and power outages in its wake in the U.S.

By 6 p.m., Doria's winds had lessened to 35 miles an hour, with gusts of up to 45. Rainfall from the storm was expected to lessen over northern New England and end sometime during the night.

'Naked Authority'

Citizens' Group Organizing To Study War Measures Act

SASKATOON (CP) — A citizens' commission is being set up across Canada to study the effect of the federal government's decision to invoke the War Measures Act last October and to look at the implications of future use of such powers, says Woodrow Lloyd, former Saskatchewan NDP premier.

Lloyd, acting as a spokesman for the citizens' group, said the commission arose from concern of many people about the use of "naked authority" in peacetime and because the federal government did not set up a royal commission to study events surrounding its use.

Lloyd and Alonzo Leblanc of the Quebec Civil Service Union, have been named spokesmen for the group.

The commission intends to have public hearings across the country, Lloyd said, scheduled to begin in Montreal Oct. 12.

The list of sponsors, numbering more than 100, includes NDP members of Parliament Andrew Brewin and Ed Broadbent, Progressive Conservative MP David MacDonald, Parti Quebecois House leader Camille Laurin and Quebec NDP leader Raymond Laliberte.

The commission has six specific questions: Why was the War Measures Act invoked? What were the roots of the Quebec crisis? What was the state of civil liberties after the act was invoked? How did the act and subsequent legislation affect civil liberties? Should the act be repealed?

British Columbia Growth

THE REPORT ON ELECTRIC power requirements in British Columbia between now and 1990 prepared by an advisory committee for the B.C. Energy Board is both warming and chilling, a source of pride and of concern.

The use of power is generally equated with progress and prosperity. The peasant in an underdeveloped country has only his own muscles working for him, plus perhaps the energy of an animal or running water. In the countries with the higher standards of living, the average person has many times the power at his bidding.

In British Columbia in 1969, according to the report, the electric energy production alone for each person was 12,667 kilowatt hours. Only one whole country on earth exceeded this production, Norway, with 14,667 kilowatt hours per capita. The U.S. Pacific Northwest produced 16,818 kilowatt hours. But the per capita production for the United States was 7,750 kilowatt hours, less than Canada's. We have reason to rejoice, obviously, that we have so much electrical muscle. A man working hard might produce the equivalent of a kilowatt hour in three hours of labor.

Moreover, British Columbia's use of electricity is expanding rapidly. The per-capita use doubled in the 15 years between 1955 and 1970. The advisory committee considers it reasonable that another doubling will occur in the next 15 years, by 1985.

But it is around this point that the conservationists and the environmentalists and the people with thought for their great-grandchildren must begin to ask, "Where does it all end?"

The committee bases its projections of energy requirements not only on the increasing use of electric power, but on the growing population. The provincial population has been rising at 3.1 per cent annually for 15 years and the committee assumes that it will continue to grow at a compound rate of 2.96 per cent to 1990.

At this rate of growth, population doubles every 24 years. By 1994, British Columbia might be expected to have 4,274,000 people; by 2018, a population of 8,548,000; by 2042 — a year that many of today's babies will certainly see — 17,096,000, and by a century from now, more than 30 million.

Thirty million persons crowded into British Columbia's habitable and arable spaces, with their demands on the province's limited renewable resources and faster, faster dwindling exhaustible resources, almost defies imagination. But it is only a century's progress at the present rate.

California's example may be pondered. The Golden State has grown to 20 million people. Now 29 per cent of them would like to move to another state. For the first time in years more are leaving than arriving, escaping pollution, overcrowding and unemployment, or trying to. And it has often been said that British Columbia is the Canadian equivalent of California. How far have we to go?

Dr. Wallace's Resignation

DR. SCOTT WALLACE, the now-independent MLA for Oak Bay, said in an article in The Province explaining his withdrawal from the Social Credit party that it is "symptomatic of the cynicism with which the political system is viewed, that when a member resigns over such an issue of principle and individual rights, he is uniformly assessed by news commentators as being naive, innocent, a dreamer."

It is not cynicism to say that Dr. Wallace was a dreamer if he considered himself, before his resignation, a member of the B.C. government, as he obviously did.

In his article, he referred several times to resigning from the government; for instance, "That I have been so continuously ignored by the government of which I became a part, has been extremely frustrating and has been the basic prevailing reason for my ultimate decision to resign." And again, "If... there is one fundamental reason for my resignation from the Social Credit government it is the undemocratic, almost totalitarian manner in which this government functions."

It is only realistic, not cynical, to observe that Dr. Wallace has been dreaming of a parliamentary system which does not exist in Canada, for he has never been a member of the government, or cabinet. And no government in Canada accepts more advice than it wants from its caucus of elected party members; nor does "democracy" — in the sense of majority rule — necessarily extend to cabinet decisions. Dr. Wallace would have found himself in exactly the same position as a backbencher if he had been elected a Liberal member of Parliament, probably with just as much reason to call the prime minister a dictator.

All of this is not to say, however, that there is no validity in Dr. Wallace's disgust with the government of Premier W. A. C. Bennett. And we do not think the premier will have improved his image among thinking British Columbians by writing off the doctor as an extreme right-winger, a representative of the doctors, not the people, and an enemy, it would seem, of the poor.

It is sickening demagoguery when the premier says that his only argument with Dr. Wallace was that he wanted to increase the dollar-a-day hospital co-insurance and "I said no, never, as premier, because I don't believe in taxing the poor when they are sick and in hospital, and that is the only issue, and if that is being a dictator, protecting the poor against the powerful, protecting the people against the powerful, then that is what I am."

The New Democrats — and now Premier Bennett — love to forget that there was a qualifying phrase when Dr. Wallace suggested increasing the hospital co-insurance payments, as an alternative to raising taxation (which would also be paid by the poor).

It was his strong conviction, he said, that no person would suffer significant hardship if up to a maximum stay in hospital of 30 days, one were to pay $5 a day — "provided the government protects welfare and low-income groups against increased payment."

OUR READERS' VIEWS

The People Come First

I FIND it rather offensive that an elected bureaucrat has the gall to call Victorians who don't want the "Old Town" invaded by towers of concrete, irresponsible. Certainly the presence of Ocean Cement at our harbor is something we could do without, but to turn from a cement yard to a cement tower isn't that much of an improvement, especially when we try to keep the "bit of England" myth alive.

A pleasant people-orientated waterfront park as shown in the 1968 "Overall Plan for Victoria" would be much more to the point. This type of development has taken place near the Bapco plant and looks very successful. Placing such a park in the shadow of a Field type complex would be horrible.

Mr. Haddock says he will no longer run the city as he would a business, yet he still thinks first of revenue, rather than people. I contend that the construction of the Field project would cheat the people out of much more than money.

These men had to rise early — anywhere from 2:30 a.m. to 6 a.m., transport canoes over unusually difficult terrain, wear antique uniform tunics in heat of about 100 degrees and, in many ways, were called upon to support an event which called for extraordinary willingness to perform a duty under difficult circumstances.

Bahrein: A New Actor on the World Stage

By ELIAS NAJIB
from Beirut

It can even be said that the Bahrainis did not want to be independent at all. The island, and the eight Trucial States have been protected by Britain under treaties going back for 100 years or more. It was an arrangement that ensured stability, protected the poorer and weaker states from the rich and rapacious, and gave Britain bases in the Gulf, which contains two-thirds of the world's oil reserves.

But Britain has now decided to remove its 6,000 military personnel in the Gulf as part of its withdrawal from East of Suez, scheduled for the end of this year. In an attempt to ensure a continuation of stability, Britain two years ago sponsored the idea of a federation of nine of the Gulf states: Bahrain, Qatar, Abu Dhabi, Dubai, Sharjah, Ajman, Fujaira, Ras al Khaimah, and Umm al Quwain. Almost immediately, the project foundered on the petty quarrels of the ruling sheikhs. They differed over their people's power in the proposed federation, where the capital should be, who should be president and a host of lesser issues.

The trouble was, other sheikhs were richer. Abu Dhabi's oil income, for example, is more than $400 million a year, compared to Bahrain's $34 million. Qatar's oil revenues total some $240 million annually. They and the poorer emirates — fearful of Bahraini domination — naturally could not see it Bahrain's way. Last spring, it became evident that a federation of nine just could not work. Sheikh Issa decided to go it alone.

With the declaration of independence two weeks ago, Bahrain abrogated all the old treaties with Britain, replacing them with a treaty of friendship, but not defense. Bahrain will now have to go through the lengthy and expensive process of setting up its own defence force.

Of the other eight, Qatar probably will soon declare itself independent. Abu Dhabi, Sharjah, Dubai, Ajman, Fujaira and Umm al Quwain last month announced that they were forming a federation of six, Ras al Khaimah, because of a potentially explosive territorial dispute with Iran, stayed out and the plans of its ruler, Sheikh Saker, are unknown.

The projected federation of six has an uncertain future. Abu Dhabi has to resolve its quarrel with Saudi Arabia over the Buraimi Oasis.

Sharjah has to settle a sovereignty dispute with Iran over a tiny island called Abu Musa, which has a population of 200 people. The island is insignificant in itself, but it controls the entrance to the Gulf and the Shah of Iran has said he will use force if necessary to back his claim.

Trudeaucrats' False Front

WHEN things go wrong, a fox politician always finds a scapegoat. Should none be readily available, he invents one.

Hitler used the Jews as his all-purpose scapegoat. Stalin and his successors assigned the same role to the Marxist "class enemy" invention.

Pierre Elliot Trudeau, in union with but not as crudely as our nationalists and the international liberal-left fraternity, blames the Americans for every difficulty, including those of his own making.

Having badly mismanaged the economy, our peerless leader badly needed a scapegoat for the consequences of his regime's wrong diagnosis and treatment of the unprecedented problem of simultaneous rise in prices and unemployment.

Mindful of his image of alleged intellectual brilliance, Mr. Trudeau could not simply embrace or endorse the primitive anti-American emotionalism of the nationalists, or the crude ideological mechanism of the socialists. He needed some semblance of rationality and fairness for pointing an accusing finger across the border to make it look both regretful and convincing to the less emotional and glib segments of the electorate.

Presumably, the cabinet in shaping the long-delayed foreign ownership report by Revenue Minister Herb Gray into such a sophisticated anti-American stance when President Nixon's drastic economic measures provided an instant and better alternative.

It did not take the holidaying prime minister long to see and seize the opportunity. After instructing his ministers to make a manoeuvre in Washington with sufficient noise and publicity to assure its doom, Mr. Trudeau hurried back from the yacht in the Adriatic and took personal charge of the scheme to put the blame for Canada's dismal economic prospects on the Americans.

It must have been a painful decision for Mr. Trudeau to make, for apart from holidaying in the Adriatic he was planning to strike one more of his blows for freedom by visiting yet another of the Communist dictators on his foreign-policy re-orientation list. But Mr. Trudeau obviously knows when to make a personal sacrifice. Besides, there will be other opportunities for shaking Tito's blood-stained hands, while the chance for an elegantly restrained (and for that very reason domestically effective) berating of Washington for our economic woes may not come his way again before the next election.

So Mr. Trudeau came rushing home and in contrast to his ministers, who unobtrusively consulted with the PM about every word they had uttered in public while he was away, eschewed the bluster of injured innocence and struck the note of calm, slightly sorrowful reasoning that most Canadians admire and expect from their leaders, especially when they are dealing with grave matters under stress or provocation.

While Mr. Trudeau had nothing new to say in his brief address to the nation on his return, he created the impression of restoring order in a chaotic situation with a calm, masterly grasp of the essentials. He even managed to convey deep understanding and sympathy for the U.S. problems that prompted the Nixon measures.

Yet, the real burden of his message was the underlying, almost subliminal but mind-penetrating scapegoat theme: If there is a more unemployment in Canada this fall and winter, it will be the fault of the United States. For no matter what Ottawa may try to do now, Canada, though innocent of any monetary and trade aggravation of the American difficulties, will be severely affected by the Nixon program unless Washington realizes that a surcharge on our exports to the U.S. is self-defeating.

This was the message of the higher unemployment warning and the "unemployed Canadians cannot afford to buy U.S. goods" bit in the Trudeau speech.

Contemplating the latter self-evident truth in conjunction with the $22 billion worth of goods we trade annually with the U.S., people will tend to forget that tens of thousands of Canadians had been thrown out of work while none of the Nixon measures were anywhere in sight, let alone in effect.

Since our trade with the U.S., and with the rest of the world for that matter, kept on growing during the period of rising unemployment under the Trudeau regime, the cause of the phenomenon must have been largely internal, not external.

Searching for the reasons of the trouble, more and more people began to see mismanagement of the economy by the Trudeaucrats who in 1968 set out to fight a non-existent "demand" inflation. The spreading realization of mismanagement started to pose a political problem to the Trudeau regime. So it reversed its misconceived monetary and fiscal policies and hoped for a corresponding reversal of the unemployment rate this summer.

When this proved to be a vain hope and the spectre of worse to come this fall and winter gave the Trudeaucrats political nightmares, the Nixon move came like manna from heaven.

Mr. Trudeau certainly knows how to make the best of it. But he should bear in mind that this particular scapegoat is not likely to live very long.

Fellow-Feeling For U.S. in Britain

By ANTHONY LEJEUNE

THE international currency crisis—headlined in some British newspapers as "The End of the Almighty Dollar"—affected London immediately in two ways: professionally, because London is a great financial centre, and on a more personal level because London is full of American tourists.

The stock market, being highly sophisticated, stood up well. Some of the tourists had rather more bother; during the week following President Nixon's announcement, the exchange rate being offered in London hotels varied by over 20 per cent. To Englishmen, who have lived through so many currency crises of their own, the whole affair brought a weird sense of familiarity — like an actor who, having recently come out of a play after a very long run, now sits in the audience watching somebody else in his role.

The newspapers could not resist comparing President Nixon's speech with Harold Wilson's announcement of the devaluation of the pound in 1967. There was the same melodramatically misleading reference to "international speculators," the same emphasis on the splendid new opportunities being offered to the nation's manufacturers; and, above all, an ominous similarity to Mr. Wilson's notorious assertion that "the pound in your pocket has been devalued."

Mr. Wilson claims that this remark was afterwards distorted by his opponents; and they certainly exploited it ruthlessly. The contrast between that remark and the inevitable price rises which devaluation caused undoubtedly contributed to his election defeat. With such an example before him, President Nixon might have been wiser to avoid even an echo of it.

At the same time, however, these experiences should, and on the whole do, give Britain a strong fellow-feeling for America's present difficulties. Having been bailed out so often in the past by American generosity, Britain has a clear duty of gratitude to help in any way possible.

Some commentators and cartoonists have expressed a certain glee at this apparent reversal of fortune. They enjoy the idea of rich American tourists having trouble changing a dollar cheque. But this is very much a minority reaction.

The British government — supported by most newspaper editors — has been trying to prevent any aggressive, anti-American response in Europe. Now would be a good time for Britain to manifest whatever remains of the "special relationship" and act as an intermediary, an honest broker, between Europe and the United States. Unfortunately the British government is so taken up at the moment with getting into the European Common Market that it feels obliged to avoid any too obvious exhibition of Anglo-Saxon Atlanticism.

The Common Market countries themselves are split on what policy to adopt, and Britain is having to move very cautiously.

From a European point of view, the most important question is political rather than strictly economic — whether this dramatic unilateral action by America heralds a new phase of isolationism. A colleague of mine who talked to President Nixon recently thinks just the opposite. The president, he says, believes that only if America's domestic affairs are put in order can she continue to fulfil her international responsibilities.

For that reason alone, sensible men everywhere must hope very much that this economic package works, and that we are not going to have a long period of monetary chaos and mutually destructive trade war. The whole free world needs a strong and outward-looking America.

Alberta Votes Tomorrow

It's a Horse Race!

By CLEO W. MOWERS from Lethbridge

Surely 36 years must be a world record for a freely-elected government holding power!

Like a ball-carrier who already has broken all the records for yardage gained, Alberta's Social Credit government tomorrow may be given still another chance to build up its total so its new record will stand unchallenged even longer.

At a time when much younger provincial governments are being defeated right and left, Social Credit ought to be the under-dog. It is not. Most pundits see no more harm to it than perhaps a doubling of the 10-member opposition.

But the pundits can be dead wrong. This is a horse race! Peter Lougheed and a full slate of attractive Progressive Conservative candidates are giving Social Credit the fright of its life, and this observer would not be surprised at the defeat of the government.

True, the foothills are strewn with the bones of politicians who thought they could unhorse Social Credit, and newspaper types who concurred.

But sooner or later it must rain (or stop raining); sooner or later every government must fall.

"Now!" is the Lougheed slogan.

"Don't forget, son, that this is 'next year' country," Premier Strom tells him in an editorial-page cartoon.

There are only two horses in the race. The NDP is running a large slate and will increase its vote from the 1967 figure of 18 per cent. But it will elect probably two members at the outside. The Liberals have a few candidates but are strictly out of the picture. Most of their modest support may go Social Credit, hoping for re-election in next year's federal election.

Mr. Mowers, editor and publisher of the Lethbridge Herald, wrote these three articles for The Daily Colonist on the eve of Alberta's provincial election, with voting tomorrow.

One of the impediments is the youth vote. For the first time, 18-year-olds have the franchise. Whether they will vote is another question. Certainly Social Credit cannot invoke any allegiance factor with them; some of their parents were hardly out of the cradle when William Aberhart and Ernest Manning first took Social Credit to power. If there is a pattern to the youth vote, it will probably spell NDP.

With only 46 candidates for the 65 seats in the 1967 election, the Conservatives harvested 26 per cent of the total vote but elected only seven members. The Liberals, with 11 per cent, elected three, all of whom were lost before this election was called, one by death, one by resignation and a federal appointment, and one by conversion to the Conservatives. In addition, the Conservatives picked up two in by-elections.

It is easy to see that a Conservative victory could be squeezed out of a small alienation of Social Credit popular support (45 percent last time).

Up to now the political scientists around Alberta have been giving the Conservatives strength in Calgary and Edmonton, where it takes twice as many voters as in rural Alberta to elect a member. However the vote will not divide that way. The battle will be a close one in both city and rural polls.

Manning's Administration Best in Canada's History

A farmer in Ireland has an axe that has been in his family for 173 years. In that time it has had seven new heads and 19 new handles.

Alberta has had a Social Credit government since 1935, but the continuity is in name only.

The ancient dogma can be found only in the archives, and on the lips of a fast-dwindling remnant of the original soldiers. Grant Notley, the NDP leader, is getting mileage out of the phrase "Tory Twins," speaking of the two major parties. The only jockeying between Social Credit and the Progressive Conservatives seems to be for a position slightly to the left of each other.

The Manning administration, from 1945 to 1968, must surely be known as one of the most successful in Canadian history. Those were the golden years for a richly-endowed province. But Harry Strom, the farmer who still has a Swedish accent, knew that he could not survive on the Manning record. He had to build a reputation of his own, run a government of his own style.

Although he has been encumbered by a lot of party deadwood, he has made a fair fist of building a new party. Half of the Social Credit candidates are new, and if he wins the election on Monday he will be free, for the first time, to build a new cabinet.

In the meantime there is criticism that the multitude of executive assistants — hardly heard of in the Manning years — have been running the government. So far as the ministers are concerned, it is not the monolithic structure that Manning built and ran. They are free to make their own decisions — and mistakes.

And some of the mistakes have been embarrassing.

It has been a tame campaign, with a minimum of issues. The Social Credit theme is one of motherhood — building together, ethnic harmony, don't let go of a good thing, and so on. The main idea in the Progressive Conservative pitch seems to be "anything you can do I can do better;" there's plenty about Alberta that's not good enough, but nothing that can't be fixed by fresh faces with new names.

That theme might have been enough to win the election for the Conservatives. By and large Albertans are not angry with their government, and they are not looking for radical changes. Newer, fresher, more open-minded people in charge might have been an adequate appeal for getting them to switch their votes.

However, Peter Lougheed slipped. He has made numerous costly promises that he would finance without raising taxes, and that has hurt his credibility. The premier, too, has done himself more harm than good by indulging in the game of promises.

Money Well Runs Dry

History Won't Do It

The conjunction of Social Credit and oil development is not the whole explanation for the longevity of the Alberta government.

The oil policy worked out experimentally by the government, combining maximum return to the public treasury with maximum incentive for private investment and development, has been copied by most of the oil-rich jurisdictions in the free world.

In history's ledger the Social Credit government should be favored.

Until the end of the Manning era, Alberta lived on its income, mostly oil income. It had no net debt, a lot of money out on loan, and an excellent collection of roads and public buildings — all paid for. Now it has had to borrow. The people find it hard to believe the government when it tries to tell them the money-well may run dry.

One of the curious features of Alberta politics in the months preceding the election announcement was the persistence of the government in saying "no" to popular demands for new or greater expenditures.

The municipalities were cut off from certain funds in one stroke, the universities in another, the school boards in another, the hospitals in another, and so on, with little to soften the blow.

"We have to cut back," was the only explanation. Still, Alberta is the least-taxed province. Alone in North America, it has no sales tax. Its gasoline tax return is high, liquor profits high, its share of the income tax reasonably high. There is no provincial estate tax, and few of the nuisance taxes.

Peter Lougheed, the Conservative leader, flatly promises not to institute a sales tax. The best Premier Strom will do is say he will try to avoid it.

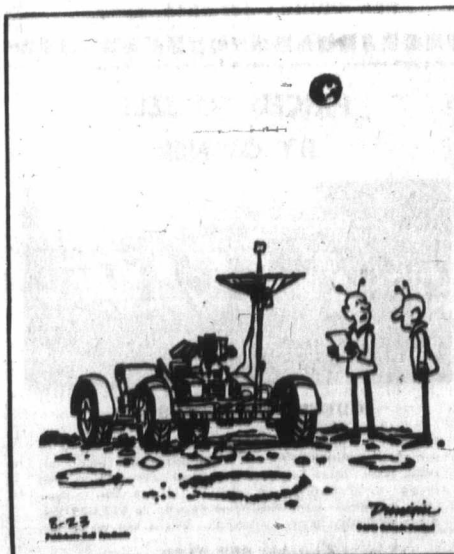

Perhaps the government is vulnerable on the ecology issue. Strom says he is not interested in leaving resources in the ground. Mining coal, finding and producing oil and logging forests are all hard on the environment, and the government's development program conflicts with ecological purism.

The premier took a firm stand against French accommodation in Western Canada, but back-tracked a bit as Quebec's position was more widely appreciated. He has a vigorous "multi-ethnic" campaign going, appealing to all the minority groups. The political results cannot yet be assessed.

Whatever the election outcome Monday, Alberta is in for new government, fresher government. With his own mandate for the first time, the Social Credit leader will wield a vigorous broom. Alternatively, Albertans will discover that changing a government is not painful. They have done it only twice before.

If Social Credit wins, it may well be stronger in 1975 than it is now. If it loses it will probably disintegrate. If the Conservatives win easily, there will certainly be an attempt to boom Lougheed for the national leadership.

SANDRINGHAM STRIKE

OPEN LETTER TO JAMES CHABOT, PROVINCIAL MINISTER OF LABOUR

DEAR MR. CHABOT:

● Section 2 of the Mediation Commission Act defines collective bargaining as follows: "COLLECTIVE BARGAINING MEANS NEGOTIATING WITH A VIEW TO THE CONCLUSION OF A COLLECTIVE AGREEMENT, OR THE RENEWAL OR REVISION THEREOF, OR TO THE REGULATION OF RELATIONS BETWEEN AN EMPLOYER AND EMPLOYEES."

● 28 nurses' aides have been on strike at Sandringham Private Hospital in Victoria since September 30, 1970, because the owners refuse to bargain in compliance with the intent and spirit of Section 2 of the Mediation Commission Act.

● On December 17, Msgr. Michael O'Connell, Vice-president of the Victoria Council of Churches, tried to get negotiations resumed. He said: "THERE ARE ENLIGHTENED CAPITALISTS AND UNENLIGHTENED CAPITALISTS — IT IS THE UNENLIGHTENED CAPITALISTS WE ARE FIGHTING. IF ANYONE IN VICTORIA NEEDS A UNION IT'S THE SANDRINGHAM WORKERS."

● On February 10, Dr. Scott Wallace, MLA for Oak Bay, said the president of the firm then managing Sandringham told him he would rather close Sandringham down than come to an agreement.

● The Victoria Colonist of May 7, 1971, quotes you, Mr. Chabot, as follows: "LABOUR MINISTER JAMES CHABOT SAYS WAGE DEMANDS OF STRIKING WORKERS AT SANDRINGHAM PRIVATE HOSPITAL ARE REASONABLE, BUT IF THE EMPLOYER SIGNED A COLLECTIVE AGREEMENT 'ONE HAS TO LOOK AT THE ULTIMATE RESULTS — CLOSURE OF THE HOSPITAL.'"

● We do not agree that the ultimate result would be closure. THREE PRIVATE HOSPITALS IN VICTORIA AND ONE IN PRINCE GEORGE, ALL SERVING THE SAME TYPE OF PATIENTS (GERIATRIC) ARE OPERATING UNDER UNION CONTRACT WITH LOCAL 1311 OF THE CANADIAN UNION OF PUBLIC EMPLOYEES.

● In July of this year we sent a registered letter to Mr. Russell Shepherd, a co-owner of Sandringham, offering to have a union-appointed accountant examine the books and related financial records of Sandringham Hospital. We were prepared to sit down and bargain realistically on the basis of what that examination disclosed. You know this is so, because we sent you a copy of the letter which you were kind enough to acknowledge.

● THE OWNERS OF SANDRINGHAM, DESPITE THEIR PLEA OF POVERTY, REFUSED TO OPEN THEIR BOOKS TO THE UNION.

● The key issue in this strike is not money. THE KEY ISSUE IS THE RIGHT OF WORKERS TO BARGAIN COLLECTIVELY AND BE REPRESENTED BY A TRADE UNION IN DETERMINING THEIR CONDITIONS OF WORK AND IN PROCESSING GRIEVANCES. This is the democratic right of all workers which so far has been denied to the Sandringham strikers.

THE ISSUE IS SOCIAL JUSTICE, MR. CHABOT. WE CALL UPON YOU TO USE YOUR POSITION AS MINISTER OF LABOUR TO PERSUADE THE OWNERS OF SANDRINGHAM TO DEMONSTRATE A TRUE RESPECT FOR THE RIGHTS OF WORKING PEOPLE BY RETURNING TO THE BARGAINING TABLE.

Vancouver Project

Tower Needles City Planners

VANCOUVER (CP) — The city's technical planning board Friday criticized a 600-foot spaza-needle type of tower proposed for downtown Vancouver, but the city's planning commission will recommend that it be allowed.

The board said in a report on a zoning application the proposed tower would be inappropriate and incompatible with surrounding properties.

But the commission voted 5 to 4 to recommend it to city council, saying it would provide an interesting interruption to what now is a monotonous skyline.

The private development would cost between $5 million and $7 million. It would have an observation deck 600 feet above Georgia Street, with a restaurant and nightclub located two floors below the observation deck. A mast atop the tower would bring the total height to 700 feet above street level.

Plans call for the project to be completed in 15 months.

'Seasonality' Ruling

Car Dealers, Resorts Beat Nixon Freeze

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The president's cost of living council ruled Saturday that car dealers, resort owners, employers of farm hands and others affected by seasonal patterns may raise their prices or wages to the peak 1971 seasonal level.

The council issued a "seasonality" ruling after receiving complaints from businesses and others who said they were caught in an out-of-season low price or wage period Aug. 14 when Nixon announced a wage-price freeze.

Many car dealers, for instance, had left-over 1971 models they were selling at a lower price. The council's ruling means that the dealers will be allowed to raise the price of a new model compared to what they were getting for 1971 models on Aug. 14 — but they will not be allowed to charge more for the 1972 model than the highest price they received during the year for the 1971 car.

Elsewhere on the economic front:

● Organized labor continued to criticize portions of the administration's economic program. The American Federation of State, County and Municipal employees met in Minneapolis, Minn., to discuss strategy for opposing the wage-price policy.

● In Japan, the dollar declined 5 to 6 per cent in relation to the Japanese yen in the first official trading there since Friday when yen was allowed to float. That was still 10 per cent above the point where Nixon reportedly would like the dollar to settle in relation to the Japanese currency.

● During a briefing, Arnold Weber, the council's executive director, said firms that ordinarily raise prices during the period when the 90-day freeze is in effect may do so, provided:

● The raise is large and associated with a specific date, such as the introduction of new cars in the fall, higher prices on the Labor Day weekend or the start of a harvest season.

● The increase has been made for the past three years.

In addition to car dealers, the ruling is expected to assist resorts, in Florida and the southwest and the Caribbean, which traditionally raise their room rates during the winter season, broadcast networks who charge higher advertising rates when new programs are introduced in the fall, and farm workers whose wages fluctuate between harvest seasons.

Weber said the government had received about 1,700 complaints since the freeze started but that most "evaporated" when persons understood the rules.

Part-Time Mayor Paid Nothing

LOS ANGELES — Los Angeles City councillor John Gibson Jr. believes he is the lowest-paid mayor of a major metropolitan in the United States.

He doesn't get paid a dime for being mayor, although he does collect $17,000 as a city councillor.

Of course, Gibson isn't mayor all the time. He is president of the city council, which means he is acting mayor when Los Angeles Mayor Sam Yorty is out of town.

In most cities that wouldn't mean too much. But so far this fiscal year, Gibson has been mayor more days than Yorty has.

And a thing like that can become a bit complicated. Last week, for instance, Gibson had to decide what to do about an ordinance passed by the city council which would have eliminated municipal rubbish collection at apartment buildings of five or more units.

Normally, Gibson would not act on a controversial matter like that without consulting Yorty. But this time Yorty was on the far eastern leg of his world tour and Gibson couldn't reach him.

So he vetoed the ordinance, and now he is waiting to see what the mayor thinks about it. At least one of Gibson's predecessors as acting mayor drew Yorty's wrath by exercising the veto power during his absence.

Since July 1, the start of the 1971-72 fiscal year, Gibson has been the city's leader 64 per cent of the time, 36 of 55 days. Yorty's present absences, according to Gibson, have already set a new record for length of absence from the city for one trip.

As of Thursday, when he was reported en route home, it totalled 32 days.

On his departure last July 24, Yorty said the trip "is being used mainly to promote trade for Los Angeles coupled with a few days vacation."

Although he performs the mayor's regular duties during Yorty's absence, the acting mayor receives no extra compensation. Yorty is paid $35,000 annually.

Gibson believes any acting mayor should be paid an additional sum during the period he serves in that capacity. "It's a lot of extra work," he said. "Over short periods it's not so bad. But it wears you out over long periods."

Gibson said he puts in a 12-14-hour workday when Yorty is gone and is on call 24 hours a day, plus weekends, especially from the police department.

Northwest Territories as well as an eventual rail link to the state of Alaska.

It's more than John Diefenbaker's vision of the North. More than Prime Minister Trudeau's talk of new Arctic communities which will attract dedicated young people seeking a new life.

This is actually happening, right now. And with wholehearted federal cooperation instead of Ottawa's traditional heel-dragging it could become an accomplished fact by the end of this decade.

The spate of publicity which, inevitably, will surround the official opening of the PGE extension to Fort Nelson Sept. 30 will tend to obscure rather than draw attention to Bennett's grand design for northern development.

Notice, that was northern development not the development of northern B.C. That's important because Bennett does have a grand design which stretches far beyond the borders of this province. Officially the PGE, as the province's development railroad, is making a two-pronged assault on the fabulously rich mineral and timber resources of northern B.C.

Next month the first train runs into Fort Nelson, 300 miles up the Alaskan Highway, but crews are already surveying a route for a further extension to Nelson Forks, on the Liard River just a short distance from the boundary of the Northwest Territories.

From there, freight loaded on barges for transport down the Mackenzie to the Western Arctic will be able to move at least two weeks earlier than shipments now using the principal supply route from Alberta via the Great Slave Lake.

section of B.C. the other pincer of steel is pushing steadily north from Takla Landing to Dease Lake where it is now to arrive in 1974 — two full years ahead of schedule.

Why the haste? Well, obviously the mineral potential of the area — particularly in copper — is a big draw. Big enough to interest the British Newfoundland Corporation in building a huge private hydro-electric power generation project on either the Stikine or Lakelse rivers.

And if that isn't a pretty fair indication the PGE won't be short of freight to haul out there is the untapped forest wealth of the region besides.

This, as well as the eventual linking of the Port Nelson and Dease Lake extensions in a giant circle of steel which will encompass the entire northern half of the province, is entirely within the provincial jurisdiction.

All Bennett has to do is find the millions of dollars required to finance the rail extensions. This he should have little difficulty in doing since the PGE is demonstrably such a good proposition.

But beyond B.C.'s northern boundaries, where Bennett's grand design for the north really gets into high gear, Ottawa, of course, is in control.

Resources Minister Ray Williston, who is intimately connected with the problems of northern development, says all attempts to date to win Ottawa's co-operation in the northern venture were "to all intents and purposes abortive."

The premier, overflowing with optimism as usual, says he's sure the federal government will agree to share in the cost of pushing the Dease Lake extension northwards into the Yukon — where Dawson City has been mentioned as the terminal — and eventually to link up with Alaska's state railroad.

Then, says the premier warming to his salesman's pitch, it would be a simple matter to connect the Canadian Pacific Railway at Haines Junction or Terrace with the PGE, and the riches of the Yukon could pour out to foreign markets through the port of Prince Rupert.

The plan makes sense. And according to reliable sources, unpublished federal transportation studies show this is the best if not the only way to provide the bulk freight service so necessary to northern development.

The only alternative — involving what the bureaucrats call competitive parallelism — would call for the federally-controlled CNR to push its own track up north at prohibitive cost to the Canadian taxpayers.

It's galling, no doubt, for Ottawa to find Bennett and B.C. has pre-empted the role of the federal government in northern development.

But it must be recognized, too, that for too long in the past nothing was done and B.C. simply stepped into a vacuum and did what was necessary.

Party Pooped

CROYDON, England (CP) — Susan Farren threw a meet-the-neighbors party when she moved into her new home. At 11-a-head her neighbors enjoyed a drinking evening until police joined the party and arrested Susan for selling liquor without a license. She was fined £50 by Surrey magistrates.

Death Toll of Patras Friday morning, stopped at the Greek island of Corfu, and was to have arrived at the Italian port of Ancona Saturday night.

The captain, Dimitrios Antipas, sent an SOS at 5:30 a.m. He was reported to have been the last man to abandon the ship, and was picked up by a Russian freighter.

Passengers and rescue workers described scenes of fear and panic as smoke and flames poured from the stern.

"The flames drove us into the water," said Michel Benoit of France, one of about 200 Frenchmen aboard.

"The whole ship was burning. They didn't even put down the lifeboats. We just jumped in our life belts."

Maddalena a Toscano of Milan said: "We were told of the fire about 6 a.m. They told us to stay calm. After about an hour and a half, we saw that the fire was spreading so we went overboard."

After she was in the water, she reported seeing a lifeboat turn over as it was being lowered, trapping a number of persons underneath. She did not know how many of those trapped got out.

"There was a total lack of coordination," said Jean D'Hebbonnez, a 41-year-old surgeon from France.

He called the situation on board after the fire broke out "shocking and disgraceful," and claimed that the ship had only 12 lifeboats capable of carrying 58 persons each, enough to accommodate somewhat more than half of those on board.

"Nobody told us there was a fire on board. Nobody told us to abandon ship. We had to do everything ourselves."

D'Hebbonnez said he was awakened by a rumble and ran into the galleries, already filling with choking smoke.

"We all assembled on the sundeck. There was no announcement from the loudspeakers," he insisted.

One lifeboat being lowered capsize and this was what started the worst panic, he said.

"I saw people jumping in the sea with no life jackets. There was no assistance from the sailors to coordinate the exit."

bility for the Francisco and Sacramento explosions.

Anonymous phone calls warned of the Sacramento and San Francisco blasts minutes before they rocked the 17-storey state office tower in the capital and the historic waterfront Ferry Building in San Francisco. There was no warning call in San Mateo.

The woman caller in Sacramento said she was a Weatherman member. Weatherman, a radical youth group, has claimed credit for bombings in various areas of the country during the past two years.

The letter, delivered as had been promised by the San Francisco warning caller, said in part:

"On Saturday, August 21, George Jackson, Black Warrior, revolutionary leader, political prisoner, was shot dead by racist forces at San Quentin...."

"Tonight, the offices of the California prison system in San Francisco and Sacramento were attacked. One outraged response to the assassination of George Jackson."

Police estimated damage at $50,000 in the Ferry Building. No damage estimate was available in Sacramento.

About 1,500 mourners, many sobbing, raised clenched fist salutes Saturday as the body of Jackson was carried from funeral ceremonies.

"Power to the people!" the mourners shouted. "George still lives!" yelled one man.

Black Panther party co-founder Huey P. Newton delivered the eulogy.

Newton pledged the Black Panthers would fight for revolutionary ideals Jackson espoused.

"With love as our guide, we'll slit every throat that threatens our lives and our children," said Newton.

Johann Thernmann, a Finnish student aboard the hydrofoil, said he went in a rubber raft to the plane wreck and rescued a woman.

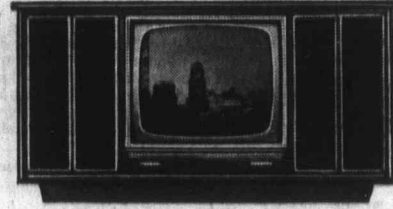

"We spotted the plane and heard a woman crying in German, help, help (hilfe, hilfe). She was sitting where the wing had been torn off. We had trouble getting close because of the sea. But in the end we got her aboard the raft," he said. "She had suffered cuts and a broken arm and she was shocked."

C. E. Welboel, manager of the Kastrup airport, said it appeared the Hungarian pilot had tried an emergency landing on the water, but the impact was violent and the aircraft was smashed to pieces.

Welboel said it was windy and rainy at the time but visibility was fairly good and "the conditions for landing were not bad."

No passenger list was released Saturday night. But airline officials in Oslo said five of the passengers were believed to be Norwegian. Most of the others were believed to be East Europeans. The 10 members of the crew were all Hungarian.

Sweden Toward Urban

By MURRAY

City planning has been debated issues and there population and over views known on the mat.

In Victoria, the battle over the city's future planning has been fought for some time now and the public is becoming more and more involved.

The issues are: highways versus low structures; parks versus buildings; retention of waterfront for the people versus use for dense development.

Every so often someone will point out that Victoria planners should take a closer look at what's happening in Sweden, a country that has long enjoyed an international reputation as a sort of Mecca of town and city planning.

Not So Good

Are things really that good in Sweden? Has that country reached a peak in the evolution of modern city planning?

Not according to Sweden Now, a monthly publication in English containing information on Swedish developments in the fields of art, politics, finance and business.

In an article about urban planning in Sweden, the magazine says the only people pleased by the country's planning schemes are scores of town planners and architects from foreign countries.

At Odds

The Swedes themselves, the article says, are more at odds with the Utopia projected by their country city planners and architects.

The initial stages of the Utopia, Sweden Now says have become the target of ever-increasing criticism.

Hardest hit by public scrutiny, the article says, is the apparent policy of building cities to accommodate car businesses and offices instead of people.

'Sterile City'

"Stockholm will be a city that no longer fits to live in a place of work where no one will feel at home," the magazine quotes critics of the capital's planning.

Residents, it says, charge that Stockholm is turning into a "sterile concrete city with the same dull, horizontal vertical forms that one sees all over the globe."

Recently citizens of Stockholm turned out by the thousands to protest the cutting down of several dozen trees to make room for a new way station.

Political Ripples

They didn't succeed, magazine says, but they caused ripples among city's politicians and planners.

The case is somewhat reminiscent of last year's successful attempt by Bay Street residents to save number of trees from being cut down to accommodate road-widening project.

For Youth

Modern housing developments in Stockholm's suburbs, once hailed as the future in housing, the article says, are now called anti-social and without the life a community needs.

Swedes Cool Toward Urban Trend

By HUBERT BEYER

City planning has become one of Canada's most debated issues and there's hardly a town of 25,000 population and over where citizens don't make their views known on the matter with increasing gusto.

In Victoria, the battle over the city's future planning has been fought for some time now and the public is becoming more and more involved.

The issues are: highways versus low structures; parks versus buildings; retention of waterfront for the people versus use for dense development.

Every so often someone will point out that Victoria planners should take a closer look at what's happening in Sweden, a country that has long enjoyed an international reputation as a sort of Mecca of town and city planning.

Not So Good

Are things really that good in Sweden? Has that country reached a peak in the evolution of modern city planning?

Not according to Sweden Now, a monthly publication in English containing informative material on Sweden's developments in the fields of art, politics, finance and business.

In an article about urban planning in Sweden, the magazine says the only people pleased by the country's planning schemes are scores of town planners and architects from foreign countries.

At Odds

The Swedes themselves, the article says, are more and more at odds with the Utopia projected by their country's city planners and architects.

The initial stages of that Utopia, Sweden Now says, have become the target of ever-increasing criticism.

Hardest hit by public scrutiny, the article says, is the apparent policy of building cities to accommodate cars, businesses and offices instead of people.

'Sterile City'

"Stockholm will be a city that's no longer fit to live in, a place of work where no one will feel at home," the magazine quotes critics of the capital's planning.

Residents, it says, charge that Stockholm is turning into a "sterile concrete city with the same dull, horizontal and vertical forms that one sees all over the globe."

Recently citizens of Stockholm turned out by the thousands to protest the cutting down of several dozen elm trees to make room for a subway station.

Political Ripples

They didn't succeed, the magazine says, but they caused ripples among the city's politicians and planners.

The case is somewhat reminiscent of last year's unsuccessful attempt by Bogie Street residents to save a number of trees from being cut down to accommodate a road-widening project.

For Youth

Modern housing developments in Stockholm's suburbs, once hailed as the ultimate in housing, the article says, are now called sterile and without the life a community needs.

"For whom are we planning and building our cities?" the magazine asks.

The answer, it says, is for the young who will "hold the reins in a few years."

But according to a study recently conducted by a Swedish opinion-research institute, 83 per cent of the young people between the ages of 19 and 34 in Sweden said they wouldn't want to live in the big cities.

Not Vague

"This is not a matter of vague opinion. It is a thundering 'no' from the grass roots," the magazine says.

And yet, 80 per cent of Sweden's population lives in urban areas and the figure is expected to reach 85 to 90 per cent by 1980. This will mean that, in a decade, most people will live in an environment which they reject now.

Serviceman Dies in Crash

A serviceman from CFB Esquimalt was killed early Saturday morning in a single-car accident on the Island Highway at Oyster River.

Campbell River RCMP reported that Gordon H. Fraser, 34, was dead on arrival at Campbell River General Hospital. A passenger in the car, which Fraser was driving, Steve Skelch, 17, of Nanaimo, was released from hospital after treatment for minor injuries.

RCMP said the car hit a concrete abutment after going out of control on a sharp corner in front of University of British Columbia's research farm, 15 miles south of Campbell River.

Damage to the car totalled about $500, they said, Fraser was killed, they believe, when his head hit either the ground or the abutment.

The new issue of PGE 6 1/2% Parity Bonds

Rewarding as the promise of our northern development-

As the Pacific Great Eastern Railway moves steadily northward, growth and prosperity quickly follow. New towns, new industries and new jobs are created as this vital shipping route allows a fuller utilization of British Columbia's abundant resources. Today, the pace of development quickens as the PGE moves ahead in two separate regions. In the far north-eastern corner of the province, the last links of steel are being laid, marking completion of the rail line into Fort Nelson... while north-west of Fort St. James, a new 420-mile route is under construction, due for completion in 1974. Reflecting the promise of this bold development is the new issue of PGE 6 1/2% Parity Bonds.

Unconditionally guaranteed by the Province of British Columbia, these new bonds yield 6 1/2% per annum, with interest payable quarterly... and bonds are cashable at any time for the full purchase price. In British Columbia today, there isn't a better, safer way to gain a substantial guaranteed return on your family savings. And your investment will help to assure continued growth for our great north country.

The Issue: Purchases of this issue by an individual or company are limited to $25,000.

Denominations: Bearer bonds are available with coupons attached in denominations of $100, $500, $1,000, $5,000 and $10,000.

Registration: Bonds of $1,000, $5,000 and $10,000 can be fully registered.

Interest: Interest at the rate of 6 1/2% per annum will be paid on the 15th day of December, March, June and September during the currency of the bond.

Date of Issue: September 15, 1971.

Date of Maturity: September 15, 1976.

Redemption: Pacific Great Eastern 6 1/2% Parity Development Bonds can be redeemed at par value at any time at any bank in the Province of British Columbia, or at any branch of the Pacific Great Eastern Railway's bankers throughout Canada.

Hanrahan to Court

CHICAGO (UPI) — Special prosecutor Barnabas Sears said after a conference with four associates Saturday he and his assistants will prosecute charges against state's attorney Edward Hanrahan and 33 others indicted last Tuesday by the Cook County grand jury.

Sears presented evidence to the grand jury which indicted Hanrahan, one of his assistants and 12 Chicago policemen on charges of conspiring to obstruct justice in the aftermath of a Dec. 4, 1969, police raid in which Black Panthers Mark Clark and Fred Hampton were killed. Hanrahan has accused Sears of violating an agreement the special prosecutor allegedly made with criminal court judge Joseph Power to return the indictments.

Sears has denied any wrongdoing, but declined further comment on Hanrahan's accusations.

"It's improper for me as special prosecutor to comment on anything relating to the matter," Sears said Saturday.

Oil Spill

Skim Ship Works

SAN CLEMENTE (UPI) — An experimental oil cleaning ship was sent out to sea Saturday to clean up an oil spill that has polluted 20 miles of southern California beaches and the navy called the operation "successful."

Lt. Cmdr. D. F. Zellmer, coordinating officer for the cleanup, said the yard oiler vessel collected about 2,500 gallons of oil and water.

The oil, spilled during a navy refueling operation last week, was in tar-like sheets which, Zellmer said, were literally picked out of the water. The navy was investigating the possibility of rigging other boats to pick up the rest of the sheeted material.

Operations will resume today. The experimental ship is a small craft with two steel booms 75 feet long sticking out from the bow at an angle.

Bloodhounds Seek Lost Boys

PORT ANGELES (AP) — Teams of bloodhounds were called in Saturday in the search for two Bellevue boys missing in brushy beach country along the Strait of Juan de Fuca.

Sheriff's officers said ground parties Friday found no trace of Mark Peal, 12, and Levin Lee Connor, 10, who wandered away from a family campground Thursday.

Giants Continue to Plod Toward Division Title

San Francisco Giants, who finished second five times in a row before becoming a third-place club last season, will need a complete collapse if they are to avoid the championship of the National League West this year.

Jim Tang

FRED HUCUL is due to arrive with his family on Wednesday, giving him a couple of weeks to get settled before Victoria Cougars open their training camp. A fellow he'll count on for a lot of help, trainer Dick Earle, was scheduled to take up Victoria residence today. He was with Kelowna Buckaroos last season . . . one of the reasons B.C. Lions haven't looked like much on offense is that Jim Young has so far not been the threat he usually is. A fellow who has seen Lions in every game this season maintains Young is sadly out of condition and desire . . . veteran Dutch Harrison bows to no one in his admiration of the golfing ability of Jack Nicklaus. He maintains that Nicklaus destroys four players in every tournament—the two he is paired with the first two days and the two he gets in the last two rounds—and it has nothing to do with Nicklaus' deliberate style of play. "What really gets you," says Harrison, "is to see him standing up ahead of you with a wedge trying to decide whether to put the ball to the left or right of the pin while you're standing back there with a 5-iron in your hand wondering whether you can hit the green." . . . biggest recent opening for a good chuck was Dale Tallon being quoted as saying that it's up to Vancouver Canucks whether he becomes a professional golfer now or in easy stages between hockey seasons. The somewhat-less-than-strong bargaining play prompted one fellow, who asked as his reward only that he be allowed to watch when it happened, to suggest that Canucks call Tallon in, present him with a set of clubs and wish him well . . . and about the Canucks there is the persistent rumor that someone, or some group, has put up the money so that Medford can pay off the loan made by Herb Capost. And it is also said that the arrangement includes Medford acting as a front with the new money-lender(s) running things . . .

HAROLD MEWTON, who has been at Vancouver's North Shore Winter Club for 11 years, gets a special welcome from Lloyd Kearns and Tudy Dubeau on his decision to move to Victoria. Now innkeeper at the Playlands Curling Club, Mewton attended ice-makers' school in 1969 when Gutsold was head instructor and then he worked under Kearns for the first seven years at the North Shore club . . . Vancouver Nats have priced their season tickets at $75 and $65, which is five dollars more than Victoria Cougars will charge for their 34-game Western Hockey League package . . . and that reminds that one of the big sports bargains around is a season ticket to home games played by Victoria Dolphins, new members of the five-club Big Four Junior Football League. They cost only five dollars and Dolphins, who make their home debut tonight at Royal Athletic Park at 8:30, have already indicated they can contend for at least second place. Be there tonight if you can and buy the package . . . Leo Lewis, the Lincoln Locomotive who was probably the best all-around halfback to every play in the Canadian Football League, is now coaching at his alma mater—Millsport's Lincoln University . . . no one gets more enthusiastic about sports than the Japanese. They went overboard for baseball and for skiing and golf and now they've got a tenpin boom going. The country has 1800 establishments with 44,600 lanes and only the U.S. has more bowlers . . . Dallas Cowboys surely have quite an edge in their National Football Conference schedule and shouldn't have too much trouble winning the Eastern Division title. Their opponents for the 14-game league schedule had a combined 28-53 record last season. By comparison, Philadelphia Eagles, who need that kind of a schedule to have a chance at a respectable record, have opponents who were 53-29 in 1970. It's downright silly scheduling . . .

GEORGE BLANDA is another professional athlete who's different. Asked if he didn't think Oakland Raiders should give him a bonus for his spectacular clutch play last season, the veteran quarterback and placekicker was actually innocent. "Why should they? Want I paid to win ball games?" he fumed to columnist Wells Twombly. "That's what I was supposed to do. I also lost a game early in the season when I missed a 32-yard field goal in San Diego with a few seconds left. Was I supposed to give my pay back for that week?" . . . Ron Swoboda, one of the original New York Mets who is now with New York Yankees, may be regarded as managerial material after a recent observation. Asked if he knew of any way a team could end a slump, Swoboda didn't even ponder before he came up with "Sure, just start winning." . . . the Vancouver Island Quarter Horse Racing Association has not yet made any announcement on any plans for a 1972 racing meet but one is probable, and it would be a certainty if the VIGHRA gets its own racing facility . . . one of the latest NHL rumors is that Boston Bruins will trade Derek Sanderson to Vancouver Canucks in exchange for Rosalie Palomest and Dano Wilson . . . it's beginning to look as if Cleve Boyer could have ended his major league career because of his criticism of Paul Blumhede, general manager of Atlanta Braves. The outburst, touched off by club curfew rules, brought him his release but Boyer has been playing minor league baseball ever since . . . Greg Robinson, one of the few holdovers who will be with Victoria Cougars this season, is back in town after a summer at a logging camp which muscled him out to about 180 pounds. He has a chance to be a good one . . . picked up is the report that Bill Hicks is thinking about retiring as a player and taking the job as coach of Regina Pats of the Western Canada Hockey League . . . Vida Blue, the sensation leftfielder who has become just about the biggest drawing card in major league baseball, had quite a final season as a high-school quarterback. He threw passes for 3483 yards and, averaging 10.3 yards a carry, added 1800 yards on the ground for a one-season total of 5283 yards, not often matched by a team at any level.

Rick O'Dell Wins . . .

... Super-Stock Feature

Larry Pollard Trims Dad Again

Larry Pollard won his second straight stock car main event Saturday night at Western Speedway and once again his closest pursuer was his father Earl.

Larry, runner-up to his father in the trophy dash, started 18th in the 19-car field of the 25-lap main event, worked his way into the lead on the 15th circuit and won by a car length and a half. Larry last week spoiled a sweep by Earl but was four car lengths back when O'Dell got the checkered flag.

The super-stock main event, Rick O'Dell poured it on from the start, got the lead on the 11th lap of the 35-lap race and coasted the last two laps with his engine belching smoke. O'Dell blew a crankshaft on the 33rd lap with a lead of three-quarters of a lap and had to nurse his car the rest of the way.

Ken Alexander, the first heat winner, closed strongly den Dodgers would have to finish 23-7 to tie for the lead.

Other pursuers are hopelessly out of it. Atlanta Braves would have to finish 23-3 to tie if the Giants win 15 more games, and for the about-to-be-dethroned Cincinnati Reds it would need a 26-2 surge.

SHORT OF TYPICAL

Saturday was sort of typical of the way the Giants have performed ever since they sped away to an early lead.

They blew past Philadelphia Phillies impressively in the first game winning, by 5-2 with three pitchers sharing a three-hitter and Willie Mays hitting his 645th career home run.

But the Giants couldn't stop Rick Wise in the second game. The 26-year-old right-handed ace of the Philadelphia staff got tough after a two-out first inning. He contributed his fifth home run of the season as the Phils came from 0-2 to tie at 3-3 then hit

McDonalds Win Title

SASKATOON — Victoria McDonald's Bread captured the Western Canada junior 'B' lacrosse title, whipping defending-champion Winnipeg North Stars, 22-7, Saturday night.

It was the third straight game in which Victoria scored more than 20 goals, finishing the four-team, round-robin tournament with 71 goals while allowing 15. The B.C. team opened the championship Thursday with a 27-3 win over Assiniboia, Sask., and followed it Friday with a 22-5 victory over Edmonton.

The Victoria team leaves for Cornwall, Ont., this morning to play in the Canadian final against either Cornwall or St. Regis. The best-of-three series begins Monday night.

POWER-PLAY UNIT The power-play unit of Norm Baker, Jim Lynch, Glen Neuman, Jerry Kustaski and Mike Walsh did most of the damage, picking up 37 points. Baker, the point-man, scored once and set up nine other goals. Lynch finished with six goals and three assists; Kus-

The game got rough in the final 30 minutes with a total of four Winnipeg players ejected from the match. Victoria had an odd-man play for most of the final period.

Lynch and Kustaski got 11 goals each in the three games but Baker was the top Victoria pointgetter. He scored seven goals and gained 19 assists for 26 points.

Canada Gets Tie

AUCKLAND, N.Z. (Reuter) — Canada and Wales played a 0-0 tie in a C Division game in the world women's field hockey tournament Saturday.

Trapp, Mick One-Two

PRINCE GEORGE (CP) — Vaughan Trapp of Victoria holds a two-stroke lead going into today's final round of the Stuen Fraser Open golf tournament.

Trapp fired a four-under-par 68 Saturday to go with an opening round 67 for 135. Willingham cup team amateur Dave Mick of Victoria had a 69, which coupled with an opening round 68 gives him a 137 total.

Defending-champion Bob Cox of Richmond was in third spot, five strokes behind Trapp. He fired 75 Friday and Saturday. Doug Robb of Vancouver was alone at 141, two shots ahead of Jack Weaver of North Vancouver.

Kansas City Royals boosted their second-place margin to seven and a half games by beating rookie Ron Blomberg, 4-3.

Blomberg accounted for three runs with two homers but didn't get much support from his New York Yankee teammates and Royals made it when an eighth-inning error set up the winning run.

Argo Rush Worries Keys

VANCOUVER (CP) — Toronto Argonauts' bulldozer-like defense line that throws eight men at the quarterback is coach Eagle Keys' main worry when his British Columbia Lions play the undefeated Eastern Conference leaders today.

"It's their blitz that worries us most," said Keys. "They use an eight-man blitz instead of the normal six or seven, figuring that they can get to the passer before he gets the ball away."

"So if you send out four receivers you only have enough people left to stop six of them."

The vision of his slim quarterbacking roster being stomped by eight Argo

Today's game between Toronto Argonauts and B.C. Lions will be broadcast by radio stations CJVI (900) and CKWX (1190) starting at 3:30 p.m. tacklers also has Keys pondering whom to start — veteran Paul Brodeur or rookie Don Moorhead.

"If they do come in like that, Moorhead has better ability to run and get out of trouble. There again, Brodeur is more experienced. That's what I've got to pick between. Either way we expect the quarterback to get spilled sometimes."

Keys said he won't decide until just before the game kicks off at 3:30 p.m. His decision is made that much more difficult after a look at some of the Argos doing the blitzing.

Defensive tackle Jim Stillwagon and safety Marv Luster — "an expert on such things," Keys said — will be on the line, trying to duplicate Calgary's 32-1 walkover against the Lions earlier in the week.

HARRINGTON OUT
One Argonaut defender that Lions won't have to worry about is big Ed Harrington.

Coach Leo Cahill requested that the commissioner's office place Harrington on the suspended list for refusing to make the trip to Vancouver.

Cahill said that Harrington had advised him that he did not feel in condition to play. The big end has been hampered by a large calcium deposit in one thigh.

Argos will reactivate Larry Braine, cut earlier from the roster, if permission is received to suspend Harrington.

London Youth Nips Mate In Junior Golf Playoff

EDMONTON (CP) — Kelly Roberts, 18, of London, six strokes behind the leader going into the final 18 holes, won the Canadian Junior Golf championship Saturday in a sudden-death playoff.

Roberts and Adam Brown, 18, of Hamilton, Ontario teammates and roommates through the week, finished the 72-hole test tied at 289 after Roberts fired a par 71 to Brown's 75.

Brown almost won the title on the first playoff hole but his 50-foot birdie putt attempt clung to the edge of the cup.

TOPPED DRIVE
On the third playoff hole, Brown topped his drive and was unable to pick up the stroke as Roberts got down in par.

Tied for third place at 290 were Rob Laing, 17, of Prince George and Murray McLaren, 16, of Woodbridge, Ont., who led after the third round.

McLaren, up and down all week with rounds of 69-75-68-78, won the juvenile championship. Runner-up was last year's juvenile champion, Robbie Jackson, 16, of the Bizarro, Que., with 299.

Mike Defalco, 18, of Lacorne, Que., in second spot after the third round, came in fifth with 292.

ALWAYS A CHANCE

"I was six strokes behind," said Roberts who was awarded the Pepsi-Cola silver cup. "I never thought I'd get back," said Roberts in accepting the trophy, but, you always have a chance in junior golf."

Brown had been tied for second with Laing going into the final round. He had rounds of 71-70-73-75. And blamed his putting for the poor showing on the last day.

He took a three-over par 38 on the front nine and a one-over 37 on the longer, more difficult, back nine. Roberts was one over on the front and one under on the back. He was 71-76-71 for the first three rounds.

TIED FOR SIXTH

Stephen Ball, 18, of Weston, Ont., and B.C. champion, Scott Keenlyside, 18, of Langley, tied for sixth with 295.

Keenlyside carded a final round 74 and ball a 78. McLaren's 68 was the lowest score for 18 holes in the tournament and was only two strokes off the club record set by Wilf Homeniuk, of Winnipeg, in the Alberta Open several years ago.

He credited that round Friday to a different putting stance but the new style didn't work Saturday.

Keith Burrell of Victoria Uplands carded a 75 Saturday to share 10th place with Gordie Randa of Cedar Hill, who had a 77, and three other golfers.

Rob Beauchemin of Gorge Vale closed with a 76 for an even 300. Don Marsden and Gary Ferguson, both of Gorge Vale, fired 75 and 77, respectively, to finish with 304 and 305.

Former Victorian Dave Donaldson of West Vancouver had a 74 for 302.

More than 230 golfers entered the event but the field was trimmed to the low 175 handicappers before play started and to the top 60 and ties for the final 36 holes.

Saanich Close To Boxla Title

Saanich only needs a win today against New Westminster to take the round-robin B.C. "A" division lacrosse title at Esquimalt Sports Centre while a playoff in the "B" division is assured.

Saanich became the only undefeated club Saturday by downing North Burnaby Norburns, 11-8. New Westminster evened its record to 1-1, same as North Burnaby, by beating winless Esquimalt, 8-3, in the other "A" division game.

Peter McCreesh and Stu Rhodes scored three goals each to lead Saanich. Paul Charles (2), Gordon North (2) and Wayne Reeve were the other Saanich scorers.

In the round-robin "B" competition, each team won one game and lost one. Prince George edged New Westminster, 11-10, in overtime. New Westminster nipped Nanaimo, 13-12, in a game which had to go into sudden-death action. Vancouver NorWest downed Prince George, 6-4, and Nanaimo got by NorWest, 8-6.

With each team having just one game remaining in scheduled play, a two-team tie is assured, which will require a playoff.

Spanish Junior Misses Bid for Two Net Titles

VANCOUVER (CP) — Two final matches in the Canadian Open junior tennis championships stretched to three sets each Saturday for Jose Cambra of Barcelona, Spain, who won the under-16 title but missed the under-18 crown.

Cambra, who whipped Mike McLoughlin of Toronto, 6-0, in the first set of the under-16 final had to come back with a 6-1 win in the third set after McLoughlin pulled even with a 6-3, second-set victory. McLoughlin won the Canadian Closed title in the same division last weekend.

Returning to the court for the under-18 final, the tired under-16 Spanish national champion couldn't quite cope with Richard Legendre of Quebec City but yielded reluctantly, 6-2, 4-6, 6-2.

SERVICE TROUBLE

Cambra had trouble with his service, normally a strong part of his game, and repeatedly double-faulted with a high, throwing delivery. It allowed Legendre to attack at will.

In the second set, Cambra was at his best. Legendre said he "was just amazing. I thought I was playing well, but he passed me on when I rushed the net, served better, and his forehand was many times a winner."

Play resumed back to Legendre in the third set. The Quebec player was confident and placed himself closely, while Cambra lost at several vital points and his serves became weaker and weaker.

JANET HALL LOSES

In the under-18 girls final Janet Hall of Vancouver lost to Adrienne Straub of Toronto. Miss Straub took the first set, 7-6, after 25 minutes of close play. She lost the second, 6-3, but there was a long break before the final set as when George Peppas presented trophies to winners of previously-played finals.

Miss Hall couldn't get her game going again and lost 6-0 in the third set, with the under-18 championship going to a former Hungarian junior star and now the best under-18 player in Ontario.

In other finals, Scott Cathcart of Toronto defeated Glen Bradshaw of Victoria, 6-3, 6-3, in the under-14 event; John Turner of London, Ont., teamed with Steve Whitehead of St. Catharines, to beat Bob White of Everett, Wash., and Peter Meade of Seattle, 1-6, 6-3, 6-4, in the boys' under-18 doubles class.

Satellite Golf Delayed Again

KIAMESHA LAKE, N.Y. (AP) — Rain and flooded fairways forced postponement Saturday of the $60,000 Concord Open, a PGA satellite golf tournament, for the second straight day.

Eddie Griffiths, PGA tourney supervisor, called off Saturday's play at dawn when it was still raining.

The second round is now set for today with a 36-hole wind-up Monday on the hazy par-3, 72-hole Hotel course, which plays at 7205 yards.

The first-round leaders Thursday were Dick Mayer, the former U.S. Open titleist, Jim Wiechers and Jim Jewell, with two-under-par 70s.

Weaver, Rodgers Gain Final After Crampton Tops Arnie

PINEHURST, N.C. (AP) — Arnold Palmer, the last of the glamor names, was knocked out of the $200,000 United States Professional Match Play Golf championship in a startling upset Saturday.

Bruce Crampton, the man who did it, himself was eliminated in the next round. These unexpected developments set up a final today between two comparatively unheralded pros, Dewitt Weaver and Phil Rodgers.

"There seems to be a lot of sad faces around here," Crampton said at a press conference after upsetting the popular Palmer, 69-72, in the morning quarter-finals.

REAL SORRY?

"I'm real sorry, fellows," added the 35-year-old Australian.

Crampton, winner of the Western Open this season and nine other tour events in a 15-year career, slipped to a six-over-par 78, in the semi-finals and lost to Weaver, who had a 77.

The 31-year-old Weaver, who has yet to win in seven years on the pro tour, scored a 71-72 win over Lou Graham in the quarter-finals.

KASHLY WINNER

Weaver goes into the 18-hole showdown for the $30,000 first prize against Rodgers, who beat Ken Still, 69-76, in the other semi-final of this unique event that calls for head-to-head competition with scoring based on total strokes over 18 holes.

Rodgers took a 70-73 decision over George Knudson of Toronto in the quarter-finals while Still birdied the second extra hole to beat Tom Weiskopf after each had shot a one-under-par 71 on the 6973-yard Country Club of North Carolina course.

"I thought I played reasonably well for the four rounds," said Palmer, who was 11 under par for 72 holes and, at 277, had the best total-stroke score at that stage.

"I had a bunch of putts that went in and out of the hole on the front nine and that really hurt me."

Palmer, along with the other quarter-final losers, picked up $5,000 from the total purse of $200,000. That pushed his total earnings for the year to $194,887, the best money season ever in his 14-year career.

He now ranks third on the current money list behind Jack Nicklaus and Lee Trevino. Nicklaus, along with South African Gary Player was eliminated in the first round here. Trevino and Billy Casper, each with health problems, did not compete.

OLD JAMMER

"He one-putted five holes in a row," Palmer said of the curly-haired Crampton.

"He missed the green on the first four holes on the back nine and I'm standing there thinking: 'No, no, no. Now we go.'"

"But he gets it up and down every time. That really put the old jammer on me."

"I just scrambled when I had to," Crampton said.

He birdied the second hole from 20 feet and got a two-stroke swing on the 153-yard, par-three third when he putted out from 10 feet and Palmer bogeyed the hole, missing the green to the left.

GALLERY GROANS

That gave Crampton a three-stroke lead after three holes and the highly partisan gallery was groaning.

Crampton bogeyed the sixth hole when he put his drive in the left rough and couldn't reach the green, but Palmer went one over the eighth, coming up short of the green. Both birdied the ninth,

Penticton Club Changes Hands

PENTICTON (CP) — The ownership of Penticton Broncos of the British Columbia Junior Hockey League has changed hands.

Dr. Arnold Lowden, president of the BCHL and leader of a group of Penticton businessmen who purchased the club, made the announcement Saturday.

Lowden said the acquisition was made through purchasing the interests of George Stoll of Summerland and Bruno coach Jack Taggart of Penticton.

He said the purpose for buying the franchise was to forestall any chance of the club being taken over by out-of-province interests.

He said the new owners were disturbed by recent moves that in which Victoria Cougars, Vancouver Centennials and New Westminster Royals passed into the hands of people from the prairies and elsewhere.

Lowden said the new owners had made no final decisions on policy changes but he did not rule out a possible working agreement with a team in the Western Canada Hockey League.

Eric Bishop, general manager of Victoria Cougars, announced earlier this week that an agreement had been reached with the Penticton owners, before the change in ownership.

Rest Your Case Stakes Winner

SARATOGA SPRINGS, N.Y. (AP) — Cragwood Stables' Rest Your Case drew away in the final yards Saturday to win the seventh running of the $128,925 Hopeful Stakes.

The chestnut son of Traffic Judge, ridden by Jacinto Vasquez, scored by one length over previously unbeaten Governor Max on the sloppy strip. The winner paid $15, $5.00 and $3.00. Time for the six-and-a-half furlongs was 1:17.2-5.

Loses National Rolloff

Jake Jacob Tops B.C. Masters

VANCOUVER — Jake Jacob of Victoria won the B.C. Masters fivepin title Saturday but lost out in the national rolloff at Burnaby's Loughheed Lanes.

Jacob, who gained the provincial berth by winning the Vancouver Island zone rolloff at Victoria's Town and Country Lanes Aug. 15, had games of 246-248-272 for a 927 total and a 210-point margin over runner-up Ivan Hunnar of Vancouver. Pat Lemyre of Vancouver finished with 671 in the three-man final.

Arlene Green of Chilliwack was the winner in the women's final, rolling a three-game total of 836 on games of 277, 250 and 309.

Willene McAdam of Vancouver finished second with 647 and Vera Lynne of Victoria was third with 615.

In the national final, Jacob finished third out of four bowlers in the positioning round with 774 for three games and lost to Doug Johnson of Regina in the first match-play game, 291-243.

Two Alberta bowlers took the Canadian titles. Marg Henderson of Calgary, who started from fourth place, trimmed Millie Evans of Toronto, 253-162 and Jack Smeed of Medicine Hat, who led the positioning competition with 871, edged Nick Pagnieo of Scarborough, Ont., 234-223, in the finals. Mrs. Henderson knocked off Ruby Mile of Burnaby in the match preceding her championship game.

Ranger Leads Nanaimo Win

NANAIMO (CP) — Nanaimo and South Burnaby meet today in the provincial midget "B" lacrosse final.

Nanaimo defeated Prince George, 18-9, and South Burnaby dumped Vancouver Killarney, 16-6, Saturday in the semi-finals.

Conservatives Strong

Alberta Socreds Must Buck Record Challenge

EDMONTON (CP) — The ballots in Monday's Alberta election will be black and white, but things won't be quite that simple for the province's estimated 879,000 eligible voters.

They must choose among three — and in some cases four — parties. They must decide whether to stay with Social Credit, which has been in power for 36 years, or whether it is time for a change. (See story on Page 5.)

The alternatives to Social Credit are the Progressive Conservatives and the New Democratic Party. There are also 20 Liberals and three independents among the record 243 candidates.

The Conservatives, who have never formed a government in Alberta, are challenging Social Credit in all 75 ridings, while the NDP has candidates in 70 constituencies.

The polls will be open from 9 a.m. to 8 p.m. MST and the voter must mark an X beside the name of his choice. The candidates' ballots and the order in which the names appear will rotate every 100 ballots.

There will be a separate ballot for a plebiscite on daylight time, which will allow the voters to determine whether the province will get into step with the rest of Canada during the summer. Daylight time was turned down in a 1967 plebiscite.

Harry Strom, the 57-year-old former farmer who became the province's third Social Credit premier in December, 1968, concedes that the resurgent Conservatives pose a threat to his government.

But Strom also pointed out that Social Credit was threatened, unsuccessfully in 1940 and 1955. In 1940, opposition groups joined forces to support independent candidates and held Social Credit to 35 of 57 seats. Social Credit turned back a Liberal challenge in 1955 and won 37 of 61 seats.

Peter Loughheed, a 43-year-old Calgary lawyer, gets the credit for lifting the Conservatives from political obscurity. When Loughheed became party leader 6½ years ago, the Conservatives were without a seat in the legislature. But at dissolution, they held 10 of 65 seats. Social Credit had 54 and one seat was vacant.

Redistribution has increased membership in the legislature by 10 to 75.

During the five-week election campaign the Conservatives pushed the theme "Time for a change" and urged a switch to the "Loughheed team."

'Gastarbeiters' from Britain?

BONN (Reuters) — A visit to West Germany by two British government officials has cleared the way for West Germany to absorb some of Britain's skilled unemployed.

The visit by two officials of the British department of employment led to an agreement being drawn up with West German officials for a fair deal for British migrant workers.

The expected arrivals are being described in West German press as "gastarbeiters." The word gastarbeiter literally means "guest-workers" and is the slightly patronizing term applied to 2.2 million foreign workers already in the country. The majority of them are unskilled. They come particularly from Yugoslavia, Italy, Turkey, Greece, Morocco, Spain and Portugal.

Accepting many of the dirty jobs or laboring tasks which Germans themselves shun, they earn enough in powerful marks to send money home to their families, making significant contribution to their homelands' currency reserves. Their numbers already mean that one in 10 of West Germany's labor force is a foreigner. Not surprisingly there has been some friction. The gastarbeiter tend to accumulate in the poorer parts of cities where their different ways are sometimes resented by local residents. They are often exploited by unscrupulous landlords and feel themselves underprivileged, often paying taxes while not aware that they are entitled to welfare schemes. Some have complained they are treated as second-rate citizens, and Chancellor Willy Brandt himself agreed publicly that this was a danger.

Those who brought their families felt discriminated against, particularly when they had children of school age who were completely out of depth in an alien school system. In recent months, Brandt's government has gone out of its way to ease the lot of the gastarbeiter. In a series of bilateral agreements with each home country, West Germany ensured that the main national groups have social welfare representatives and are fully integrated into the social services. Some governments are even entitled to send the medical bills to the Bonn government if a gastarbeiter's children — who have never even left their homeland — fall sick.

Half-Price Season In Caribbean

By STAN DELAPLANE
St. Thomas, Virgin Islands

Half-price season in the warm Caribbean. However, the grand hotels never have a half season on the rum punch. It goes for $1.50 a smash. Since you can buy a bottle of rum for 80 cents, this is a profitable business.

The Virgin Islands are the favorite of the cruise ship passengers. Duty-free and tax-free imports. From here you can bring back $200 worth of Swiss watches, Japanese radios, German cameras, French perfumes without paying U.S. duty. (From other duty-free islands, you are only allowed $100.)

St. Thomas is the swinging island. I like St. Croix better.

Christianized is a pretty tropical town. Overhanging balconies shade the sun. It is stone built. Pretty much as the Danes left it when they sold the islands to us in 1917 for $25 million.

The quiet island is St. John, 45 minutes by boat from St. Thomas. This is where Rockefeller has the elegant cottage hotel at Caneel Bay. Expensive. But right now there's a low honeymoon rate. So get married and live.

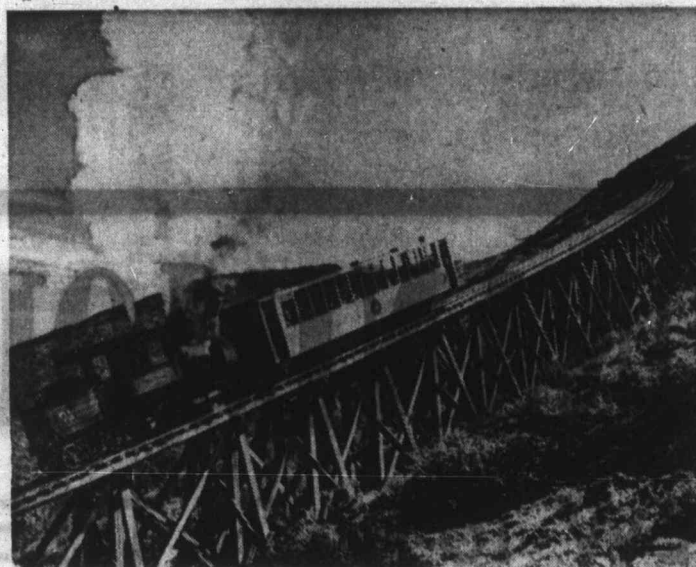

"Can you buy at the Shannon duty-free shop on the way to Europe? Or is it only when you are returning to the U.S.?"

You can buy at Shannon as long as you are leaving Ireland. No matter what the next stop is. You can't buy coming into Ireland. Or moving from say, Shannon by air to Dublin. (Unless you are only transiting Dublin airport on your way out of Ireland.)

Something new at Shannon when I was there a month ago: While you are staying in Ireland, you can get a visitor's pass to shop at the duty-free store. What you buy is held for you. Pick it up when you catch your plane going out. Gives you long, leisurely shopping time at your convenience.

"Do you buy Eurailpass here or in Europe?" Only over here. Through any travel agent. Gives you unlimited railroad travel for a limited time and it's a good deal. BUT - I've been hearing about some bad trips. People with Eurailpass standing in line for reservations. Then finding all seats taken by young, aggressive backpackers. They have the pass but simply don't bother to get reservations. Railroad people don't do anything about it. Except push you into second class.

"I heard from friends that London hotels employ so many foreigners you can't make yourself understood..." The great British tradition of service has gone smash in London town. Imported waiters and hotel help from Spain, Italy and Greece aren't up to the proper English. (That is a crowded town, mate. Get out. There's a hundred small villages with wonderful pubs and friendly barmaids.)

Train chugs to summit

New Hampshire

Railroad Travels To Arctic Region

By ERMA PERRY
Copley News Service

MT. WASHINGTON, N.H. — The steepest railroad in the world runs up the side of Mt. Washington in New Hampshire.

Built 102 years ago, the first of its kind, it literally takes its passengers on a trip to the arctic, for the weather at the summit, the soil and the vegetation simulate that of the far north. Temperatures vary as much as 50 degrees from sun to shadow and winds have been recorded up to 231 miles per hour.

This cog railway has the largest fleet of steam engines in the country — seven. Six run up and down the mountain regularly while the seventh is kept in reserve. Engines are maintained and even built in a shop at the base but there is a problem in finding steam locomotive builders and boiler makers. The trade is fast disappearing.

"This is a private enterprise working in the old steam era," says Paul Dunn, general manager of the Cog Railroad and former vice-president of the Boston and Maine. As he stood at the base talking, the smoke from one of the engines belched up black clouds.

"People forget when they talk of pollution what the old steam engines used to do."

Each locomotive has four sets of brakes, any one separately can stop the engine. Each coach, always on the uphill side of the engine and not attached, is held in place by force of gravity. Each coach has two sets of its own brakes.

The train's top speed is four m.p.h. which gives the passengers plenty of time to take in the fabulous views of the White Mountains. As the train crosses the famous Jacob's Ladder, steepest section of railroad track in the world, the train lifts itself 15 feet to move one length (45 feet) forward.

The three miles of track and trestle which wind up Mt. Washington, have endured ice, hot clinders, wind and tons of snow but the porcupine has a special taste for the ties, stringers and braces. His gnawing has forced replacement of many a timber.

The 25 college boys employed each season, are supervised by Robert Kent who teaches school in Essex Junction, Vt.

Inventor of the cog railway was Sylvester Marsh, a native of Campton, N.H. He had gone to Chicago and become a successful meat packer, inventing machinery for that industry as well as a coffee percolator.

In August, 1857, Marsh and a friend were caught in a storm while climbing Mt. Washington and almost lost their lives. There had to be an easier way to reach the summit, he figured, and set about developing this railway.

Marsh was ridiculed for his idea and his letter to the president of the railroad asking help was thrown into the waste basket. But in 1869 the cog railway up Mt. Washington was opened and has been in operation ever since.

No Cannibalism Law

Swamp Natives Kill, Eat Tribal Enemy

By DONALD WOOLFORD

PORT MORESBY, New Guinea (Reuter) — A justice in Papua-New Guinea has ruled that seven natives who killed and then ate an enemy seized normally and reasonably and acquitted them in a criminal court.

The case, which was heard by Mr. Justice Prentice in the Australian-administered territory's supreme court, has proved a source of considerable embarrassment to the administration and highlighted the problems of reconciling Western law with age-old customs.

The case, involving seven men from the jungle rain forests and swamps of the Noma district of western Papua, was basically simple and uncontested. A man from a different village had been killed in revenge for an earlier death and his body had been shared among the seven, one of whom had done the killing, and eaten.

All of the men readily admitted this, making it clear they regarded their behavior as perfectly normal.

The men pleaded not guilty to a charge of improperly and indecently interfering with a corpse — the most applicable charge the authorities could find in the absence of a specific law against cannibalism. Their contention that cannibalism was a normal thing for them was supported by other villagers and government officers working in the area.

One villager, Gerwani Tubiam, told the court that when a man died or was killed his body was given to another village to eat. Other villages reciprocated.

In his reserved judgment, the justice noted with surprise that he had no real precedents.

He could find no records of prosecutions for cannibalism overseas and the nearest in the territory occurred in the southern highlands in 1953.

In that case two men suspected of sorcery killing had been required to undergo a trial by ordeal by eating their alleged victims' rib bones with pig meat. If their bellies swelled after two weeks their accusers believed they would be guilty and duly killed.

The two ate — and found themselves charged by the government. They were later acquitted, apparently on grounds that they had been compelled to eat.

To nomad people, cannibalism was both a source of rare protein and a method of burial.

Relax, Take a Taxi

Colombia-Los Angeles Times Service

BUENOS AIRES — The driving is like the driving of Jehu, the son of Nimshi; for he driveth furiously, reported the Old Testament.

And the modern Jehu, driving his chariot in New York, Paris and other large cities, is just as furious. He seethes with pentup frustration from heavy traffic and takes it out on his miserly passengers.

But the wary taxi driver can relax here. In this, the largest capital in the southern hemisphere, the average cab driver is an unusual, if not unique, representative of his trade.

Buenos Aires taxicabs are operated mostly by men who say "muchas gracias" cheerfully on being handed the exact amount shown on the meter. They'll even wave aside a tip if they're short of change and the alighting passenger doesn't have the exact amount of an intended tip.

True, an occasional visitor will be taken to his destination by the "scenic route," but more often than not, the Buenos Aires cabbie will offer his passenger a cigarette or a newspaper and travel by the route and at the speed indicated by the passenger.

WEELEY, England (UPI)

Members of a Hell's Angels motorcycle gang acting as unofficial security guards for a three-day rock music festival fought with organizers and rock fans Saturday amid a crowd of about 120,000.

More than a dozen persons were hospitalized and many others were treated for minor injuries, first aid attendants said.

Police arrested at least 15 persons as the clashes broke out, with the motorcycle gang members swinging steel pipe and lengths of wood. Police had stayed off the 200-acre site of the festival until the trouble began. A search turned up knives and shotguns, police said.

No reason was given for the fighting. One spectator said there were "too many local tough guys about." The Hell's Angels are British who follow the pattern of the American motorcycle gang of the same name in California. For several years the British group has posted its members at rock concerts and had a record of maintaining order until Saturday's trouble.

Thousands of spectators, some bleeding from head wounds, fled and girls screamed when fights broke out at the festival, already marred by fires which drew fire engines to the site.

Licence to Burn?

Open house at Project Recycle Saturday drew several hundred visitors who wanted to see how warehouse at 4026 Borden, Saanich, is being used to recycle tin cans, glass, paper (except old newspapers), fats and bones. Group hasn't figured out what to do with old kettles, licence plates and other items classed as "miscellaneous steel," but Judy Beiton, 18, of 2575 MacDonald Drive, Saanich, shown above, and others are working on it. — (Barry Casson)

Glad You Asked That

Lucy Doesn't 'Think' Food

By HY GARDNER

Q: Is it true that Lucille Ball keeps her face and figure looking so young by eating only health foods? — Mrs. E. Romén, Ozone Park, N.Y.
A: "Tell your reader," Lucy says, "I eat whatever I want for breakfast and generally skip the evening meal entirely. But I think the biggest aid to keep my weight where I want it is that I never really 'think food.'"

Q: I've read that Catherine Deneuve, the beautiful French movie star, has a 7½-year-old boy. Who's the father? — Gunther L.D., Cleveland.
A: Roger Vadim — who offered to marry the actress when she was pregnant but was turned down.

Q: John Wayne — who's been making movies for years — does he have any respect for the new crop of movie-makers? — Arnold M., Houston.
A: No, he doesn't. "The men who control the big studios today... know nothing about our business," the Duke says. "They're in it for the buck. The only thing they can do is say: 'Jeez, that picture with what's-her-name running around naked made money, so let's make another one. If that's what they want, let's give it to them.' I'm glad," Wayne shrugged, "I won't be around much longer to see what they do with it."

Q: Liberace seems very humble and likable when he's onstage entertaining. Is he that way offstage, too? — Mrs. Prentess H., Dallas.
A: We'll let Liberace answer for himself: "My great virtue is that I have no vanity. People criticize me but when they meet me, nobody can help liking me."

Q: I heard that James Arness of Gunsmoke was hurt in the California Earthquake. Anything to it? — Lita Gomez, San Antonio.
A: The report grew out of this incident. When, as Marshal Dillon, on location, Arness fired some shots at a bandit, his horse reared and threw him. A wrangler from the Fat Jones Stable (located near the epicentre of the Feb. 9 quake) blamed the horse's behavior on the catastrophe. Still not over their fright, many of the animals remain skittish. Fortunately, neither actor nor horse was hurt.

Q: Does Dick Cavett see himself in the image of Johnny Carson, Merv Griffin, or more like David Frost? — M. Fendleton, Des Moines.
A: "I've established an identity," Cavett told a reporter, "it's a kind of a dimpled winsomeness masquerading as sophistication. A combination of wit and earthiness, as if Voltaire and Jane Russell had a child."

Week in Records

Success for Singer?

By KING LEE

Randy Newman, who hasn't gained the success he deserves, may have finally broken through with his Randy Newman Live Album.

Although the singer-songwriter has been acknowledged as one of the most important artists of this generation, his records have bombed miserably for the last two years.

Now, at last, comes recognition. His show at the Bitter End in New York City was taped and the resulting album was sent to radio stations and music writers strictly as a promotional gimmick. But the response has been so good that Reprise Records has packaged it for the commercial market.

If you get a chance to listen to Randy Newman Live, do so.

You will more than likely be pleasantly surprised.

Had the opportunity to hear a fine local group called Tee Bag in the Student Union Building at the University of Victoria recently. Guitarists Ken Ashcroft, 25, Terry Walling, 22, and Mike Horte, 24, combine with organist Skip Sporic, 22, and Gary Montague, 22, to make fine music. Tee Bag plays basically commercial rock stuff with some original material thrown in.

They're a fine group for dancing and they should do well in the booking department. Less than six months old, they can be reached for gigs at Ashcroft's (383-5824) or Horte's (598-4357).

Hit LPs: There are quite a number of good albums recently released.

Hello, My Cheviot Home by The Guess Who is another good outing by this Canadian group. Featuring Burton Cummings on vocals and piano and Greg Leakey and Kurt Winters on guitars, the group stands out in One Man Army, Goin' a Little Crazy, One Divided, She Might Have Been a Nice Girl and Life in a Bloodstream.

Peggy Lee fans have a treat in store in Where Did They Go. One of the few to last in the music business, she does well in the title song, I Don't Know How to Love Him (from Superstar). Losing My Mind, All I Want, Goodbye Again and George Harrison's My Sweet Lord.

Elvis, The Other Side, features flip sides of former smashes. They're early-Elvis and originally "throw-away" tunes but his fans will still go for such cuts as Ask Me, Crawfish, Dixieland Rock, King Creole, Hot Dog and Fame and Fortune.

Paul Stookey's first solo effort since splitting from Peter, Paul and Mary is called Paul And. None of the material is original but he still does good work on Gabriel's Mother's Highway Ballad No. 16 Blues, Wedding Song, Meanings Will Change, Sebastian and Lucy.

Come Back Home is another fair middle-of-the-road offering from Bobby Goldboro. Saturdays Only, And I Love You So, A Poem For My Lady, Your Song, Come Back Home and It's Up To You are his best.

Miniskirts Banned At Shrine

FATIMA, Portugal (UPI) — Pilgrims wearing miniskirts, hotpants or shorts will not be allowed to visit the shrine of Our Lady of Fatima, Roman Catholic church authorities said Saturday.

Fatima Shrine, 93 miles north of Lisbon, is the most famous shrine in Portugal visited by thousands of foreign pilgrims every year.

Placards in Portuguese, Spanish, French, English and German have been put outside the shrine advising pilgrims not to enter the shrine in miniskirts, hotpants or shorts and not to smoke during the visit.

This is the first time that church authorities have mentioned miniskirts, hotpants and shorts in the placards. Until now the placards advised the pilgrims and Christian faithful to be "properly dressed" before entering any shrine or church in Portugal.

IMPORT REPORT
By CAM McCALLUM

DATSUN 240Z

The results proved that the Datsun was still the car of the year, it was the best car and the best buy in its class of sports car. One driver went so far as to say he thought the 240Z should be placed in a class by itself, and then compare the other four cars.

This test confirmed the facts that sport buffs and discriminating buyers had already discerned. The Datsun 240Z is one great automobile! It has been so well accepted that the supply and demand situation in the U.S. is virtually unprecedented. Used 240Zs fetch higher prices than original dealer prices.

Drop in to McCallum Motors and look it over, we only have two Datsun 240Zs in stock and we sell them on a first come first served basis. There is no other car experience like owning a Datsun 240Z.

GM Executive To Janitor?

PONTIAC, Mich. (AP) — An elderly man dressed in work clothes was reading the posters outside a movie theatre when the theatre manager noticed him and offered him a job.

"Would like to work?" the manager asked. "I need a janitor." "No, thank you," the man replied. "I've worked for 52 years and that's enough."

The manager didn't know that he had just offered the janitor's job to Louis G. Seaton, 65, who retired last year as vice-president for labor relations of General Motors Corp. after many years as chief labor negotiator for the giant auto-maker.

"I was tempted to put him on a bit," Seaton said later. "But I just didn't have the heart."

MOUNT KISCO, N.Y. — Publisher and humorist Bennett Cerf died at his 42-acre estate. He was 78. Cause of death is believed to have been cancer. Cerf founded Random House which published many U.S. writers — including William Faulkner, Eugene O'Neill, Truman Capote, James Michener, Philip Roth, John Updike, Saul Bellow and Sinclair Lewis.

WARSAW, Poland — Jacqueline Onassis narrowly escaped a pushing crowd by jumping into an empty street-car that drove her off to safety after the funeral of Prince Edmund Radziwill, brother-in-law of her sister, Mrs. Lee Radziwill.

CALGARY — Gordon Herbert Love, pioneer Canadian broadcaster, died here at the age of 81. He is widely credited with setting up Canada's first full radio news room.

DARLINGTON, England — Al Martino is finally getting his war medals and army pension — 52 years later. Martino, 73, earned two medals, $302 cash gift and $8.40 a month pension for serving with the Italian army during the First World War. His niece made out an application for the awards and the Italian government approved them.

WASHINGTON — U.S. District Judge George L. Harb has turned down a request by 33 members of Congress for access to a secret report that was said to have advised President Nixon to cancel a huge underground nuclear test Oct. 2.

LOS ANGELES — Improper questioning by a deputy district attorney has led to a mistrial for one of Charles Manson's lieutenants, Steve Grogan, 20. U.S. Superior court judge Joseph Call ruled that prosecutor Burton Katz had posed "inflammatory questions" outside the realm of cross examination in Grogan's trial for the murder of a civil servant, Donald "Sharty" Shea. Grogan was charged with cutting Shea's head off on Manson's order.

SEATTLE — The $2.3 million civil trial of San Francisco mayor Joseph Alioto and two former Washington officials has been delayed until Sept. 20. Attorneys asked for more pre-trial time in Seattle before the case is moved to Vancouver, Wash.

YUBA CITY, Calif. — The attorney for Juan Corona, accused of killing 25 farm laborers, has filed a $100 million claim charging his client had been falsely imprisoned and physically and mentally abused.

NEW YORK — Unable to talk but capable of standing with assistance, reputed underworld chieftain Joseph Colombo was removed from a hospital two months after he was shot. The family has a compound in Orange County, N.Y., and there was speculation he might have been taken there.

STONEWALL, Tex. — Former president Lyndon B. Johnson quietly celebrated his 63rd birthday playing with his three grandchildren at the tree-shaded LBJ ranch.

CLARKSBURG, Mass. — Patrolman John Scarbough was sitting in his cruiser when he spotted a car traveling at high speed. Before he could give chase, the automobile crashed into a tree at the side of the road. When he got to the car, Scarbough found his sister, Mary Ellen, 16, dead of a broken neck, and a brother, Daniel, 19, badly injured.

SAN CLEMENTE, Calif. — President Nixon is cruising Pacific Ocean waters off Catalina Island in a plush, borrowed $5-foot motor yacht. Press Secretary Ronald Ziegler said he had no indication how long the cruise would last. He said he thought the President would do some reading aboard.

LANSING, Mich. — A "humanitarian" bill that would give $10,000 to a Detroit man imprisoned 30 years for a crime he did not commit passed the Michigan senate Friday on a 29-0 vote. Charles Clark, 72, was convicted and sentenced to life imprisonment for murder during a robbery in 1938. He was proven innocent in a 1968 trial.

Revolt Leader Suicides

Chad Blames Libya For Overthrow Bid

FORT LAMY, Chad (UPI) — Chad accused Libya Saturday of backing an unsuccessful

ful coup to topple President Francois Tombalbaye and announced the leader of the revolt had committed suicide while under police interrogation.

Tombalbaye, whose central African country is dominated by the Sahara Desert, severed diplomatic relations with Libya and ordered the charge of affairs to return to Tripoli.

Tanks rattled through the wide and almost deserted streets of Fort Lamy and the radio station, post office and airport were under heavy army guard.

Government officials gave few details of the coup. Its leader had committed suicide and "two men of foreign origin" were under arrest, they said.

Police said Ahmed Abdallah killed himself in his solitary confinement cell after being asked to name the future head of state to be elected by the rebels. He was given 15 minutes to reply and when police returned to the cell he was found dead inside, they said.

The 53-year-old president has faced a constant revolt by the northern "Tibesti" tribesmen for the past six years. Bands of the nomadic guerrillas have swooped out of the desert and attacked several provincial capitals administered by the southern Sara tribe.

Bishop Backs Strikers

LAS PALMAS, Spain (UPI) — In a move unprecedented in recent Spanish history, a bishop has expressed his support for striking workers and ordered that this weekend's church collections be handed over to them.

The support was expressed in a pastoral letter from Msgr. Jose Antonio Infantes Florido, bishop of the Canary Islands capital of Las Palmas. It was a comment on the strike of 400 local transportation workers who have stayed away from their jobs for 2½ weeks because they have not received any salary payments since May.

The bishops said "Christian principles" and respect for "human dignity" obliged him to speak out on the case. The letter was published after Infantes visited some of the workers who were meeting in a church.

The Spanish church has in recent years shown increasing concern for social problems.

South Vietnam Votes Today Seven Candidates Per Seat

SAIGON (UPI) — The South Vietnamese hold their national assembly elections today with political observers watching for signs of voter reaction to controversial President Nguyen Van Thieu.

There are 1,242 candidates nationwide seeking the 159 seats — an average of better than seven candidates for each seat. Results from the 7,332 polling stations in the country's 58 voting constituencies were expected to be known unofficially within hours after the polls close tonight on the first assembly election since 1967.

The election normally would not draw much interest outside of South Vietnam. But the controversial presidential race scheduled for Oct. 3, in which Thieu is the lone active candidate — he elevated the assembly voting to a possible barometer of how voters feel about Thieu.

Ottawa Guessing Game

If Canada Votes This Fall, Nixon Did It

By STEWART MacLEOD

OTTAWA (CP) — In Ottawa's favorite guessing game — the date of the next federal election — next year remains the most popular choice, but the new United States import duties have revived scattered speculation about the possibilities of a vote this fall.

Until U.S. President Nixon announced the new 10-per-cent duty two weeks ago and cast a heavy shadow over Canada's exporting business, the government's advisers were confidently predicting a brighter employment picture for next spring. This could be a compelling factor in the timing of an election.

But the picture is no longer clear. Prime Minister Trudeau has said that "thousands" of Canadians could lose their jobs because of the U.S. surcharges. If these surcharges are maintained for a long period, the full impact could hit Canadian industry in six months time.

In the face of this, no one is predicting what the unemployment situation may be like by next year.

Some highly-placed Liberals argue that if an election were held this fall — even with relatively high unemployment — the government would have some success in laying the blame squarely on the U.S. doorstep.

But by next spring, they say, the initial impact of Nixon's move will have been forgotten, and the government would have little success in blaming external forces.

The danger of a fall campaign held under these conditions, say sources, is that it would be bound to take on strong nationalistic overtones, which could be construed as anti-Americanism.

They say that Prime Minister Trudeau, who makes the final decision on the election date, is opposed to nationalistic-style campaigns.

There is also the problem of positive campaign issues for a campaign held under such circumstances. No one has any inclination to return to the 1911 Conservative campaign slogan, "No truck or trade with the Yankees," or the Liberal's tariff slogan of 1930, "Let Uncle Sam go his own way; our way is with John Bull."

There is general acknowledgement that any retaliatory action taken by Canada against U.S. exports would further damage Canadian industries, many of which depend on the availability of U.S. supplies.

At the moment, say sources, Trudeau is too busy considering financial and economic measures that might be taken to ease the blow of the new duty without worrying about an election.

A cabinet source says there is no doubt that the effects of the U.S. policy will be seriously considered in terms of an election date, "but we'll have to wait until the dust settled before any conclusions can be reached."

River Spill Tough

SARNIA (CP) — Canadian and United States officials were trying with limited success Saturday to clean up an extensive oil spill in the St. Clair River after two ships collided there Friday.

A U.S. Coast Guard helicopter scanning the area reported that up to 30,000 gallons of diesel oil may have spilled from the West German freighter Trans-Missouri in its collision with the Brazilian ship, the Nefuno.

Booms used to contain the oil from spreading while it was being removed by sucking machines were making little headway because of the strong current.

Ken Geddes, a Polymer Corp. official, said:

"There is a tremendous amount of oil. The whole river is covered with it."

"We'll eventually end up in the St. Clair marshes — then the ducks will get it."

Henry's Still Got Stage Itch at 90

By WILLIAM GLOVER

LONDON (AP)—All the world's still a stage to Henry Loman, ex-star of variety shows and dean of London theatre senility.

"We're all in show business."

one way or the other," the sprightly 90-year-old proclaims from his cubbyhole just off Piccadilly, at the stage door of the Criterion.

Frail, bald and pungent, Loman keeps watch 12 hours a day making sure "that nobody comes in that hasn't any business."

Loman has been at work since he became a performer at age 14 in 1894.

"It was most extraordinary how I began anyhow because there was no theatre in my family. My father was a glass engraver, but when the Belgians started doing that with sand he got to be steward of a Liberal club, and I'd go along to watch little concerts."

He started with Fred Karno, the famed English music hall master.

"Then I went out in my own act. I was supposed to be a good straight man. I don't know about that but I got plenty of work."

One partner was with him for 20 years. The team broke up because the other chap "got to be a damned nuisance," specifies undefined.

Nuisance is Loman's word of dismissal for any memory of displeases. Of his wife—

"I divorced her. She was a nuisance. Wasn't in variety but wanted to be the boss and run my business."

His ex now lives in Spain with their daughter, wife of retired Brig-Gen. H. W. Ollive of the United States Air Force.

Loman weaves oddments into his talk with a challenging: "If you don't think that's funny, I do." One sentimental story he allows. About his little Scotty which refused one night in the Second World War to go down into an air-raid shelter.

"Saved my life and two women who had asked me where to go. A bomb hit the tube station that night and 187 people were killed."

On his 90th birthday last Dec. 31, Criterion owner Donald Albert threw him a party, presented a silver goblet and vowed larger cups on Harry's 95th and 100th birthdays.

"My principle in life is pay your own way," he says.

"It's been a wonderful life."

You can't live on reminiscences of the past, but it's still good fun talking about them."

Shawnigan Lake Arts School Was Successful

First Year Shows Potential

By any reasonable standards, the Shawnigan Lake Summer School of the Arts must be counted a success and worthy of repetition.

The concept was good. It brought a group of international musicians and teachers to an international group of students. The school also gave the community a series of summer concerts that were, on balance, highly acceptable.

There are plans to expand the activities of the school into the area of visual art as well as music. There are also plans to extend the musical teaching to cover winds as well as strings and piano.

The question is why are these just plans and why is there nothing definite arranged in the light of the school's success?

The answer lies in the fact that the school depends on public money from the B.C. Centennial Cultural Fund. The awards are made on an annual basis and this was the first year for the school.

No predictions can be made or plans set until it is known what the fund's committee has in mind for 1972. It is to be hoped that the pilot project will be allowed to grow into a more comprehensive summer school with an even greater offering of public concerts.

There are some drawbacks but these are not insurmountable. The school can only accommodate just over 100 students and it would seem that larger premises are necessary.

It would help the organizers if they knew they could count on aid well in advance of the start of the school so that the calibre of teaching staff can be maintained.

Ideally it would ease many problems if the plans could be made two years in advance. This might call for a commitment from government and a change in the year-to-year grants structure.

The first year has shown that the school has great potential. It now remains to be seen if it can be sustained and improved.

The Vancouver Art Gallery celebrated the provincial centennial with a major exhibition of the works of Emily Carr. It will end today and be shipped to Montreal and Toronto.

The show was supplemented with a brilliantly written and illustrated catalogue prepared by Doris Shadbolt.

Mrs. Shadbolt, curator of the gallery, combines a biography of the Victoria painter with a fine critical study of her work. It is good to read the realistic approach to Miss Carr's work when we have been so long smothered in eulogy.

Mrs. Shadbolt has taken a sharp scraper to the veneer that has been applied to the painter's work and we get a fresh perspective.

The illustrations, many in color, will help anyone coming to Miss Carr's work for the first time. There is also a complete list of the paintings exhibited with dates and ownership attributed.

The catalogue is certainly of more than transient value and will be included among the definitive works on the painter. It is probably the only definitive work of its kind at the moment.

Anyone interested in Miss Carr should have a copy of this catalogue.

The law is a strange and sometimes asinine thing. A young man was convicted of vagrancy last week for playing his guitar in the street and accepting money from his listeners. He was begging, it seems, by indicating he would like a donation.

It would appear that asking for money for playing in public is all a matter of how you go about it.

relationship to the talent displayed but why is one a tourist attraction and the other a lawbreaker.

In other cities around the world playing and singing in the street is considered an attraction. The late Edith Piaf got her start singing in the streets of Paris. She earned her nickname The Sparrow by standing in the gutter singing.

The buskers abound in London playing the lineups of theatre crowds. Street musicians are part of history and part of a city's culture but apparently not here.

It would be interesting to know what it cost in police and court time and cash to bring a minstrel to non-justice.

Fair Possibly 'Best So Far'

COBBLE HILL — The 62nd annual fall fair Saturday was an unequalled success. There were more entries than in 1970 and by late afternoon it looked as if last year's attendance figure of 1,500 would be topped.

Vice president of the Cobble Hill-Shawigan Lake Farmers' Institute, Jim Boyles said I think we'll have more people this year than we had last year. Everything went well. It has been a very good fair and possibly the best so far.

Visitors crowded the Cobble Hill community hall, which was laden with a great variety of indoor exhibits ranging from hay, turnips, honey, home baking, flowers to photographs, various art displays and needlecraft. Among the visitors were former B.C. lieutenant governor George Pearkes and Mrs. Pearkes, who enjoyed themselves during the unofficial visit.

Outdoor activities consisted of various 4-H contests, judging of all types of livestock and beef cattle. Judge Alex Turner from the Victoria area praised the good standard of beef cattle. One of the highlights in the outdoor ring was a special show of highland cattle with 14 entries. One of the competitors George Prud'Homme of Duncan said "the highland cattle show was just as good as any on the mainland."

He said high shipping costs at $200 per truck discouraged mainland breeders from coming.

Another special attraction was a day-long horseshow with competitors from different Island centres. Two families each with several children, engaged in a friendly rivalry as to the number of entries and prizes.

Mr. and Mrs. John Stewart and their children from Cobble Hill had a total of 66 entries covering practically every category of the prize list and took 10 top prizes. However, Mr. and Mrs. Bill Barton with their children from Chemainus did even better. Although they only had entered in 44 classes they won 15 prizes.

Fishing Trip Begins With Bear Holing Boat

GOLD RIVER — An Esquimalt man setting off for a wilderness fishing trip Friday night found the wilderness came to him — in the form of a large black bear which ran into his trailer.

Gold River RCMP reported Saturday that K. W. Thomas, of 521 Foster, was driving his pickup truck along Mill Road (Highway 28) toward the fishing grounds at Muehlat Inlet about 9 p.m. Friday. He was towing a boat trailer with his 18-foot craft.

Thomas told the RCMP that a full-grown bear — he estimated its weight at 500 pounds — charged out from the side of the road straight at his truck. He swerved the truck to avoid the bear, he said, but the animal crashed into the trailer.

The force of impact was so great the boat was knocked completely off the trailer and a hole was punctured in it and the trailer frame was bent badly out of shape.

The bear was believed to be injured, RCMP said, because there was blood on the road but when police went to look the bear could not be found.

Passing motorists helped Thomas put the boat back on the trailer and continue. Damage was estimated at $200.

RCMP noted that only 24 hours earlier a motorist had hit and killed a deer on exactly the same stretch of Mill

Two-Week Communication Gap

Phone Service Loss Costly To North Galiano Business

By MARY BACKLUND

GALIANO ISLAND — Some of the polish comes off progress when it means some people have to suffer.

So it would seem to residents in North Galiano, who have had their telephone service cut for about two weeks while work crews widen and blacktop the main road between Galiano and North Galiano.

The telephones were out Aug. 13 and came back to life for a brief period Aug. 18, then silence. Work crews restored communications Friday but the 190 residents, who operate 40 telephones, feel the cuts were costly.

Ray Bell, the storekeeper at Spanish Hills Store, said that he had to make three trips to the south end of the island, 17 miles, to call in his orders to his wholesalers.

Jim Rogers, owner of Valhalla campsites and cottages, says that he has lost a lot of business as he has not been able to take reservations by the phone and people were not willing to drive to his campsites and take a chance on there being vacancies.

Frank Reader of Madrona Lodge said he also had not been able to receive calls, lost business.

Bill Stafford, of Salishan said that he has been fully booked since the beginning of June and had not lost much.

In the north of Galiano Island where the fish camp is, owners Reggie and Verna Hume were so busy that they didn't have time to speak to anyone but the cut proved a real hardship for them. They have had to drive to the south end of the island to telephone their orders to the wholesalers and they said they could ill afford the time.

In an emergency they would have only had fishing boat radios for contact — if any, boats were in.

All residents were aware of the fact that in order to have their road widened and the dangerous turns taken out, they must suffer some. But it was hard to take when they had no way of communicating with the rest of the world.

A message from the Attorney-General of British Columbia

"This week you'll be seeing and hearing newspaper, radio and television messages about safe driving.

Your provincial government has undertaken this campaign because, frankly, it's high time that we all came to grips with the rising problems of death and injury on our highways.

We are attempting to provide as much information as we can, on such key subjects as impaired driving, the use of seat belts, and safe driving habits that may someday save the lives of you and your family.

There's a long Labour Day weekend coming up. We want this year's holiday to be the safest ever. But we need your help. Please try to follow the advice our campaign is offering. Keep your seat belts buckled. Never drink and drive, and always handle your vehicle safely and sensibly.

Let's make our highways safer, for you, for your family and for the other drivers too."

War Disabled

Promise Kept In World Trip

By NANCY BROWN

A 25-year-old promise is being fulfilled in Victoria this weekend by a diminutive but determined woman.

Although crippled herself, Mrs. May Eden, chairman of International Families Fund Ltd. and Children and Families World Community Chest Ltd., is in Victoria on the last leg of a gruelling four-month world tour to review the lot of the war disabled.

"I'm really here because of Edward Heath's promise to honor the promise made by Winston Churchill at the end of the war that all the war disabled would be looked after, including the Polish ex-servicemen."

"Even with the present difficulties we have in England Mr. Heath is honoring that promise."

Mrs. Eden's task is to make a general survey of how well the disabled servicemen are looked after and to present that survey to the social security minister in England. That applies to all servicemen of any nationality, from any war.

"I'm not promising anything to the people I talk to, except that I will fight as hard as I possibly can for them," smiled the youthful looking 77-year-old.

And in case anyone in Victoria misses her at the Empress Hotel on her visit which ends today, Mrs. Eden would like to hear from them by mail at 28 Cadogan Lane, London SW1, England.

Or, she said, they could get in touch with Royal Canadian Legion president T.G. Harris.

"As far as I can see the Canadian Legion in Victoria is doing a fine work and looking after everybody," said Mrs. Eden. "But I don't want to chance missing someone in need."

And with Mrs. Eden on their side anyone with a problem stands more than a fighting chance.

She spent the Second World War years as a road warden in London, where she was caught in bomb blasts three times, escaping unhurt each time.

Then, just towards the end of the war a building collapsed while she was in it, fracturing her neck, thighs, and several vertebrae.

After she recovered from that she was severely injured in a car accident, leaving her with a permanent leg injury.

None of that, however, has stopped her work for the war disabled.

She set out three months ago from England, crossing Europe, Africa, Australia and New Zealand before arriving in Victoria Wednesday evening to start a cross-Canada tour, and going to Washington D.C. before returning to England.

In part her tour took her to Rhodesia, a country which she knows well because of long experience travelling and living in other countries.

"Rhodesia is really flourishing," she said. "They have started up just about every industry you can name."

"They are getting just about the entire African trade for cotton and woolen goods," said Mrs. Eden, pointing to two dresses woven, designed and manufactured in Rhodesia which she is wearing during her tour.

Mrs. Eden also praised the welfare system for the black African people in Rhodesia.

"It was the only place throughout Africa where I found everything being done for the African for his mental, physical and educational welfare, with the possible exception of South Africa. The next best were the African Territories."

Dance Partners Touch!

Nostalgia Sweeps U.S.

By GAY PAULEY
UPI Women's Editor

NEW YORK (UPI) — The rhythms of the waltz and the tango are beating out the electronic rock in social dancing around the nation.

Once more, partners actually are touching and at the rate some of the classical ballroom steps are coming on, Mary Molaghan wouldn't be surprised to see even the minutet resappear.

This long-time leader in the American dance world says the whole trend to the ballroom classics — with waltzes and tangos way up there in new popularity because they're showy — is just part of the nostalgia mood sweeping the country.

The nostalgia shows also in such as "old" fashion revivals (from the 1930s and 1940s), old movies or new movies with old style love plots, return of the "big band" sound which had its heyday in the 1930s and '40s also.

The nostalgia gambit, in turn, probably results from post-World War II social changes "so fast we couldn't keep up... we blew it. So everyone's going back," Miss Molaghan believes.

She adds, though, "I wish I were a Margaret Mead (the anthropologist) so maybe I could understand it all better."

Miss Molaghan, a native of Fitchburg, Mass., has been involved with dance ever since she arrived in New York fresh from a Boston theatrical school hoping to become a playwright.

Instead, she went to work as assistant director of a show starring Katherine Dunham, one of the pioneers of modern dance.

Later, when Miss Dunham opened a school, Miss Molaghan helped to run it. From there, she bought a franchise of the Fred Astaire dancing school chain and operated in Hackensack and Ridgewood, N.J., for 20 years.

Miss Molaghan no longer runs dancing schools. Instead, she's been busy for the past few years with a project long dear to her heart — that is, an American ballroom dancing championships.

In an interview, Miss Molaghan said these are the first official nationals held in the United States although competitions locally and regionally long have been popular. In addition, every spring in Blackpool, England, dancers from all over the world compete in international championships.

She said England got into the act so actively because American servicemen introduced almost all of the familiar ballroom dances to the British during the Second World War — the foxtrot, mambo, samba, cha cha, swing, rumba, tango, jitterbug, meringue, etc. The first thing the Americans knew the English were making the rules for competitions, she said.

Ballroom dance for the average person went into a decline in the United States during what Miss Molaghan described as the "homebody generation" — the adults of the post-war period who turned to their television sets to watch Arthur and Katharine Murray and Lawrence Welk instead of stepping out.

Then too, the cost of an evening out continued to rise, the big ballrooms disappeared with the demands of space for new housing, and then to top everything else, there came the electronic beat, the technological changes in music.

Chubby Checkers with one record started the Twist, she said, and rock music and the discotheques became the "in" thing.

Miss Molaghan sees the whole rock period as part of the liberation movement — "it was a whole breakaway, a new freedom for the young dancer... using the whole body," she said. "A rebellion like letting hair and beards grow."

Rock, with its frenetic "no touch" gyrations amuses her — "the kids dance that way," she said, "and then go to encounter sessions next week."

Golden Couple Honored

A reception will honor the 50th wedding anniversary of Rev. Dr. and Mrs. Hugh McLeod of Victoria.

Mr. and Mrs. McLeod will receive friends from 3 to 5:30 p.m. Wednesday at the fellowship hall of First United Church. A family dinner party Tuesday night at the Union Club will also honor the couple.

They were married, Sept. 1, 1921, in Ottawa and have lived in Luseland and Wolseley, Sask.; Medicine Hat, Alta.; Saskatoon, Edmonton, Winnipeg, and in Victoria from 1938 to 1948. They returned here to retire in 1965.

Their son, Donald of Montreal, Hugh of Thunder Bay and Charles of Winnipeg, and their families will be in Victoria for the celebration, as will Mrs. McLeod's sister, Helen Taggart of Ottawa, and her cousin and flower girl, Helena Jones of Ottawa.

Roadside Stands

Take a Drive
For Good Food

By JUDY JENKINS

A drive into the countryside around the Victoria area can be a top-notch combination of business and pleasure.

The business would be shopping for fruits and vegetables; the pleasure — the drive and these same fruits and vegetables, field-ripened and fresh daily.

Major Business

For the owners of some roadside stands, sale of produce seems almost a hobby — a profitable one — which grows as a result of more produce than is needed for family consumption.

For others, it is a full-time occupation with production and sale becoming a major business.

Although many areas have these stands, I visited West Saanich Road where, after a point, it seemed almost every home was fronted by a stand. Many were closed until the weekend when business is best.

Farm Grown

Among those open was Willowdale Farm at 6447 West Saanich Road. Mary Verhagen, 13, was minding the store for her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Jim Verhagen and was soon joined by Verhagen.

The family has had the stand for about three years and has expanded each year. All produce is grown on the farm — about six acres — as is a wide variety of bedding plants.

The vegetable stand is just an "interim" measure, Verhagen said. He will eventually turn the farm into nursery stock but corn and beans bring in money while conversion is underway, he said.

Year-Round

Even now, much of his business is in nursery stock which keeps the family busy year-round, Verhagen said.

Carrots were selling at his stands for 25 cents a bunch, beets for 25 cents, beans, 25 cents for a pound, tomatoes, 35 cents a basket, corn, 80 cents a dozen and a variety of squash at 20 cents each.

A little further along the road, golden plums took my eye. Mr. and Mrs. A. A. Kockott of 6811 West Saanich Road have had a roadside stand since 1942.

Inflation has affected many sectors of life but not the price of the Kockotts' plums. They sell for 25 cents for about a pound, the same price as they were in 1946, Kockott said.

Same Price

Although his customers in 1946 were making only about 30 cents an hour, current customers still want to pay the same price for the plums as they did then, even though they may be earning $3 an hour, he said.

One day last week, when business wasn't exactly booming, Kockott dropped the price to 15 cents and "didn't sell a pound."

"We get all kinds of people from all walks of life," Mrs. Kockott said. Many of their customers are "very nice people from the States."

Only One

When the Kockotts first opened their stand, they had fruit and vegetables and were "pretty near the only one around. Then the neighbors saw it brought a bit of money" and other stands have been all along the road for years.

Fishermen used to drive by at 5 a.m. wanting to buy vegetables, and the Kockotts felt the main thing people want from a roadside stand is fresh produce. Kockott picks only what he can sell in a day so no one gets "flat" fruit. Plums, pears and grapes are available in season.

But California has them concerned. "The little farmer is getting pushed out. He can't compete with California." The Kockotts have five acres.

A Bargain

A little further along the road is a vegetable stand, with tomatoes for 30 cents a pound, long English cucumbers at 30 and yellow and green beans, 30 cents a pound.

At many of the stands, you can find a bargain. For example, tomatoes sell for about 33 cents a pound in Victoria stores, the cucumbers for 39 cents each and green beans for 29 cents a pound — (lower than one stand). The local plums go for two pounds or 49 cents in one supermarket, a half-cent lower than at some of the stands. But all operators stress their major drawing card is freshness.

Largest Market

Undoubtedly the largest market on West Saanich Road is the Big Barn at 5540 West Saanich, owned by Harvey Lim of 4055 Cumberland. Lim has been farming for 25 years on the Saanich Peninsula and has operated the stand on its present scale for about two years.

Most of his produce is local, some of which he grows and some from neighboring farms. However, he does import some items such as peaches from the Okanagan. He farms about 200 acres and some of his produce supplies supermarkets.

Much of his business in July and August comes from tourists, but many are steady customers who come from town especially to buy vegetables, he said.

Many Customers

Although the market is open mainly on weekends, except for July and August, "at some stage" it might warrant staying open all the time "because we have so many customers," Lim said.

His prices are also under supermarket on many items. For example, local head lettuce is 5 cents each, while in Victoria it sells at 2 heads for 39 cents. He sells corn at 99 cents a dozen, and at least one supermarket beats his price at 79 cents a dozen.

Stage Undress
Rehearsal

LEEDS, England (CP) — Commenting on a new German play which included nudity and love-making, a spokesman for Leeds Playhouse explained: "It was not until the dress rehearsal that we realized there were nude scenes in this production."

Cabbage at the Big Barn was 10 cents a pound, 2 cents below supermarket price.

Perhaps one of the nicest sights in an ever-increasing world of distrust is the honor system that prevails at many of the smallest stands.

The produce sits shaded from the stand, right along the road, with a wooden box with a slot in the top. Prices are marked, and the operators expect buyers to deposit their money in the box.

'Cry-Prints' Can Tell
If Baby Is Well

MONTREAL (CP) — A baby's cry should be tape-recorded at birth in order to alert physicians of possible neurological problems in the infant, says a Miami phonetics specialist.

Dr. Henry Truby, attending the International Congress of Phonetic Sciences, has been studying new-born babies' "cry-prints" since the mid-1950s.

Dr. Truby plays the recorded cries in a machine called a spectrogram which translates the sound into a pattern on paper.

"For centuries," said the phonetics researcher, "midwives, mothers, nurses or obstetricians have at one time or another said of an infant: 'I don't like the way the baby is crying.'"

"If he cries peculiarly, chances are there's something wrong. This can range from serious brain damage to a simple speech defect."

"With cry-printing, we now have tremendous potential for determining the physiological and pathological condition of the infant."

Voice-printing also has practical use in the judicial process.

If a criminal's voice can be recorded during a crime, a suspect can be matched to the voice with the aid of a spectrogram, said Dr. Truby.

The peculiarity of a person's voice patterns may be "quite as valid as fingerprints," he said.

Bahrainis Leave The Pearl Beds

By WILLIAM TUOHY

CALCUTTA, India (Times Service) — Bahrainis have left the rich oyster beds in the Persian Gulf, only persons of high rank could wear them and their trade was controlled by men called margaritaris.

Margarit is latin for 'pearl' and indeed, the genus of the pearl oyster once was called margaritifera.

The pearl has started many legends. On the island of Bahrain, in the Persian Gulf, the natives say the "jewels of the deep" are formed when oysters rise to the surface and swallow a drop of dew or rain.

Bahrainis are experts, although pearl diving, once the premier industry of the gulf, has come on hard times. PEARLING once brought on wars for control of the rich oyster beds and in its heyday more than 1,000 boats plied the waters.

But in the 1930s, Japanese cultured pearls came on the market and the sale of the gulf's natural pearls began a steady decline. It was aided, too, by the high wages obtainable from the oil companies that were moving in.

Today, only a handful of pearl boats are left — but the divers can still dream of finding that one, huge, perfect pearl.

Lucky Strike

WYMNINGTON, England (CP) — Firemen struck it rich when they were called to put out a fire in an ancient and abandoned Bedfordshire cottage. They found 249 coins all about 250 years old and worth more than $1,000 in a can under the roof.

This is the plea of a group of women in the country who contend it is none of anyone's business whether they are married, single, divorced or shopping. They want to abolish the old Miss or Mrs. label and in its place substitute "Miz" (pronounced Miz) for all women.

They say they would rather be Ms. because of government interrogations as to their marital status, individuality that is threatened and because there is a ridiculous social value on a wedding ring. As one angry woman pointed out, "your stock goes up because you've caught a man."

Amy Vanderbilt, the noted etiquette authority, is having a cat over it. She says not only is Ms. "unbearable," but the dictionary lists Ms. as an abbreviation for manuscript.

Me? I just want to get out of the laundry room before noon.

However, it did occur to me that if you got messing around stealing abbreviations, you could foul up the English language so that most of us could get pretty confused.

Let's say we took the abbreviation of manuscript to identify women who are male-oriented reformers. That leaves manuscript with out an abbreviation. So, we would have to assign to it the initials, "mus."

Since mus. is short for museum, we would have to assign it the abbreviation of M and M.

M and M is a candy, so we would then have to call it something like M and O.

Since M and O is a laxative, we might have to rename it something nondescript like Q.B.

variation for quarterback but we could henceforth refer to him as Que.

Naturally, Que is the abbreviation for Quebec, so the Canadian province would have to have a new abbreviation, possible B.C.

Since B.C. is a short name for Bachelor of Chemistry, we would have to give it new initials: B.K.

Bk. is an abbreviation for book which is shortened to manuscript which used to be abbreviated Ms. until it became Ms. (pronounced Miz).

Why do I have the feeling we're right back where we started from?

Since Ms. stands for male-oriented reformer, we could shorten it with the letters Mr. (pronounced Mizzer).

The Now Generation

They're Not All Spoiled

Dear Ann Landers: This letter is for the girl who "through some mishap" didn't invite her mother and dad to her wedding even though they lived in the same town.

The bride asked you if she should remind her mother of her promise of several years back to give her the beautiful set of dishes which has been in the family for a long time. If I were that girl's mother she'd get the dishes all right — in a thousand pieces, right over her head.

What's the matter with kids today that they treat their parents so lousy. No consideration. No respect. Nothing. I know of parents who aren't invited to their children's college graduation.

The kids say, "It's no big deal. I may not go myself" ... and nothing more is said about it. Parents who sweat blood to put their kids through for four years of college consider it a plenty big deal but the spoiled brats never think of that. They wouldn't budge an inch to give their parents a little pleasure. If this is the Now Generation you can have it. — Charleston, W.Va.

Dear Charles: Please don't hang labels with such reckless abandon. Not all kids are selfish and spoiled rotten. Some are a joy to their parents. A girl who would neglect to invite her mother and dad to her wedding because of a "mishap" needs more help than Ann Landers can give her — and that's what I told her. To assume that most kids would behave in such an inconsiderate manner is grossly unfair.

Dear Ann Landers: I read a quotation not long ago which might stimulate some thought Scientist Gives Warning About That Dinner Drink

THUNDER BAY (CP) — Recent studies show that people who drink while eating meals do not gain as much nutrition from their food, a Toronto scientist said Thursday.

Dr. Jatinder Khanna, a biological studies scientist with the Addiction Research Foundation of Ontario made the statement during a lecture at Lakehead University where more than 100 persons from Canada and the United States are participating in an alcohol and drug addiction summer seminar.

"Drinking alcohol tends to decrease the amount of acids the body can absorb from food so even the person who drinks a lot but says that he is eating food is not really getting all the nourishment he might think," said Khanna.

He said the decrease in absorption of food acids while drinking is not marked but that it is noticeable to scientists.

He said persons who take a large amount of alcohol are actually receiving what he termed "plain calories."

"Drinking alcohol can provide a huge amount of calories, but they are nascent, or devoid of many of the proteins, minerals, acids and other vital substances that the body requires."

Girls Return To Demolition

TORONTO (CP) — Two teenage Toronto girls were back working as brick salvagers on a demolition site after a one-day layoff because they did not have proper safety boots.

Ray Wootton, 18, and Lorraine Wilson, 17, say they still do not have the boots but will be able to work on the edge of the wrecking project in downtown Toronto.

A safety inspector said Thursday the girls could not haul bricks from the site without the boots.

However, a friend of the two girls, who also works on the site, told the girls he will haul the bricks outside a metal safety fence where they can knock the mortar off and clean them.

The girls earn $10 to $12 a day.

Work-Bees Help To Open Fair

By JIM BRADAN

The last needlework stitch had been taken, the biggest squash measured, and flocks of pheasants, quail and geese have been screened for their best. The Saanich Fair is about to open for its third season.

Old-fashioned work-bees, the only requirements for which are willing hearts and elbow grease, have been operating during the evenings to ready the main hall and grounds for the three-day fair which will run through the Labor Day weekend.

"Our fair is different... it's a lovely place to come and bring the children," Mrs. Sylvia Hutt, convenor of the fair, said. She is also a director of the North and South Saanich Agricultural Society, which sponsors the fair.

"We don't want it to become too commercial. We want to keep it a rural agricultural fair, but we need more room because the fair keeps getting bigger as the district grows."

Mrs. Hutt emphasized there were no buses at the work-bees and everyone is enjoyed whenever their particular talents lead.

Some swing paint brushes, others, hammers, and some enjoy taking the place up in preparation for the crowds who just their way in to see the hundreds of exhibits.

Last year's attendance figures for the three days were near the 25,000 mark.

Mrs. Hutt observed that last year there were more than 400 vegetable exhibits, about 600 flowers, and nearly 30 needlework pieces.

"I hope we can get them all in the hall this year," she said. She expected more entries than ever for this year's show.

Although the deadline for entries was Saturday, fair-manager Henry Robinson said that any first arrived by mail Monday will be entered.

He pointed out that the fair was held mostly for pure enjoyment but it was also good business for owners of livestock because if animals win awards they can be sold for better prices.

"Some of the livestock entries come from as far away as northern Alberta," he said and noted one Alberta entrant this year will show Aberdeen Angus cattle.

While the competition is high in the livestock section the art section, which includes all forms of art from watercolor to ceramics is "strictly a fun thing," stressed section convener Marilyn Clayards.

She said the artists entering their works range in age from 16 to 84 years.

Two of her helpers, Aris Smith and Marge Bud, told of the ingenuity the art section workers have to use to hang paintings and sketches on the panelled walls without using nails.

"Old-fashioned Picture hangers are slipped into the mouldings of the room and from them are hung fishnets. The pictures are then hung on the netting by using small paper-covered wires."

"The nets are from our gardens and are normally used for keeping the birds away," Mrs. Bud said.

Miss Smith said the art show was for "enthusiastic characters who love art for art's sake... we don't want a slick fancy show. After all this is a country fair."

The North and South Saanich Agriculture Society was formed in the summer of 1968 after 16 men went by canoe from Saanich to Maple Bay to visit the fair being held there.

When they returned they formed the society and two weeks later the first fair was held in a barn on McFavish Road.

Since that time the fair has continued to grow but it has held on to its original rural atmosphere despite the ever-growing midway section with its rides and games of chance.

WORK-BEE at Saanich fair's agricultural hall brings out volunteer painters to ready building's interior. About to change sign to 163 are Mrs. Clayards, Mrs. Bud, and Miss Smith.

They May Be Insect Men But Their Field Is Wide

Entomologists are people who study insects. Right?

So when they get together, as they did in Victoria last week for the annual meeting of the Entomological Society of Canada, all they'll have to talk about will be the color of bugs' eyes, or the size of their wings or the number of hairs on a fly's leg. Right?

Wrong.

Outside of the actual scientific sessions, delegates tended to speak more of the general applications and effects of their work.

For example, when outgoing society president, Dr. William Baldwin spoke of an eye color, he was discussing it as a mutation caused by exposure to minimal doses of radiation.

Its implication for humans? There is no such thing as a safe minimal dosage at which mutations can be avoided.

When other entomologists spoke of the evidence that a serious outbreak of grasshoppers is on the way for western Canada, they did not talk about the mechanisms by which the insects fly.

Instead, they talked about factors such as the effect it would have on the world grain situation and, indirectly, on the political situation.

When some of the scientists spoke of an outbreak of a particular type of insect in an Ottawa valley pulp forest, they didn't go into great detail about the actual process by which they harm the trees.

They talked, instead, about the financial blow it would be to the forest company involved.

Not even the address given by Dr. Jacob Rempe, when he received the society's old medal for outstanding achievement dealt with entomology in a limited sense.

He discussed the discipline within the entire context of the modern Canadian university.

There were many other examples, but the best indication of the broad approach taken by entomologists to their specific, technical problems lies in that two of its past medal winners for their contributions to Canadian entomology have been Dr. Crawford Helling and Dr. Kenneth Watt.

Helling, who now is with the UBC Institute of Animal Resource Ecology, is best known among the general public for his work developing mathematical simulation models that can be used to study effects of future development in the Gulf Islands.

Watt, who is now with the University of California at Davis, is internationally known for the same type of mathematical models work, although his subject matter is the state of California.

FLQ Crisis

Teachers Lose Court Action Over Firings

VANCOUVER (CP)—The B.C. Supreme Court denied a challenge Friday to a provincial government edict ordering dismissal of teachers supporting Quebec terrorists or violent overthrow of the government.

In a written judgment, Mr. Justice J. S. Aikins allowed an initial objection on behalf of the attorney-general of B.C. against a writ asking the court to declare unconstitutional a government order-in-council of Oct. 22, 1970.

The writ, filed by Vancouver lawyer Tom Berger on behalf of six teachers, and backed by the B.C. Civil Liberties Association, named Attorney-General Leslie Peterson as Defendant and asked the court to rule that the cabinet had exceeded its powers.

The judgment was based on the question of whether the teachers had the right to take legal action, not on the constitutionality of the order. The judge ruled they were not directly affected by the order.

The order-in-council was passed while the federal War Measures Act was in effect during a kidnap-murder crisis involving the terrorist Front de Liberation du Quebec.

The order followed the firing of Dawson Creek high school teacher Arthur Olson and controversy over statements by Ronald Kirby, a philosophy instructor at the University of Victoria.

Berger sought to have the order declared outside the powers of the provincial government.

"The plaintiffs have no more than a hypothetical interest," said Aikins. "This is not sufficient to give them status to maintain this action."

He pointed out that the order used the word "advocate" and said:

"To teach, explain or expound a political theory is not at all the same as to advocate implementing the theory."

"The order-in-council may create... difficulties; if it does, a teacher, apprehensive of those difficulties and wishing to avoid a possibly troublesome situation, can be careful to make it explicit in teaching politics that he is not an advocate of the overthrow of democratically-elected governments by violent means."

Willie Keeps Lifetime Hobby in Shed

KAMOURASKA, Que. (CP) — Young Willie Labrie, wondering what makes birds fly, caught a sparrow and kept it in a cage for three days to study its behavior.

And, when he had found out all he could about the sparrow, he released it and caught another songbird which he kept for a few days.

Retired Farmer

Today, Willie Labrie is an 81-year-old retired farmer still living in this lower St. Lawrence River village, about 130 miles northeast of Quebec City and he owns collection of more than 600 different kinds of stuffed birds which he keeps in a small two-room plywood cabin — Le Major des Oiseaux — next to the farmhouse where he has spent his entire life.

"It was about seven or eight years old when I caught my first bird," he said, "and even at that time I had decided that I wanted to collect them and to study them."

One-Room School

He was going to school in Kamouraska's one-room schoolhouse at the time. Educational opportunities were few in those days and after completing Grade 5, Willie returned to his parents' farm.

Quite Honest

"I was very proud when I finished stuffing it, though to be quite honest, the bird looked good only from afar. When you looked at it up close, it was a mess."

Then he developed his own taxidermy technique and added tools of his own making.

By day he would work the fields. At night he would collect the different kinds of birds that lived in the surrounding forests and on the shores of the St. Lawrence River.

Own Ammunition

Collecting the birds was a problem in itself. A normal shotgun shell would pulverize a small bird.

"I thought about it for a while, then I decided to make my own ammunition," he said. "I designed shells with very small pellets. Then I designed shells for different distances."

After Labrie had collected all the species of birds that could be found in his area, he began thinking about faraway places.

At the start of his career, he had met a Laval University professor who had given him useful tips on taxidermy and books on the habits of various birds.

Tropical Birds

Through the professor, "I got in touch with a Dutchman who had been in South America and Indochina. He was a collector and wanted specimens of Canadian winter birds. I wanted tropical birds, so we traded."

The trades enabled him to study just about every kind of bird found in Brazil, Peru and Colombia.

Today, although blind in one eye and unable to work on small specimens, Labrie remains passionately interested in birds.

"Some students come here and they tell me they are studying birds. So I ask them if they have ever seen this type of bird, and they say 'No.' So I ask them 'How do you learn about birds?' and they answer 'In the library.'"

Can't Learn

"Can you imagine that, they are studying birds and they've never seen a bird. You can't learn that way."

Labrie is willing to sell his collection to a university or museum so that others can share the knowledge he has accumulated.

He is reluctant to put a monetary value on the collection.

"I figure it cost me about $2,000. I'd sell it for $10,000."

"I have learned a great deal about birds and I am sure others could as well. Still maybe I would keep a dozen of my favorite specimens. It wouldn't harm the collection."

"It's just that I don't think I could live without some of my birds here."

Fingerprint Check

Bandit's Car Found

Police have recovered the car used by an unnamed masked man who tried to rob a motel manager of $4,000 in cash Monday.

Victoria police said Saturday the car was found in the Esquimalt area, near the Gorge Road Hospital Rehabilitation Centre.

Police are now checking the car for possible fingerprints.

The man tried to steal the money from Patrick Hungenberg, general manager of the Telly-Ho Travelodge while he was on his way to the bank.

Hungenberg was about to drive off when a car drove up to about 15 feet of his car.

The would-be robber approached Hungenberg who hit him and ran away with the money. The assailant was reported wearing a nylon stocking over his head.

Hall Mark

SHIPLEY, England (CP) — Hope for impatient ladies waiting for their husbands at the 19th hole came from golfer Peter Hall when he raced round a 6,000-yard course in 31½ minutes. Although he took 86 strokes over the 71-par round, he knocked 60 minutes off the previous fastest circuit with the help of a Land Rover, a couple of scooters and 20 caddies.

BROKEN PIPE is examined by Ian Bishop, 10, of 3923 St. Peter's Road, Richard and Viola Furdal, 3929 Cumberland Road.—(Ellis Shipman)

Couple Flooded Out

A burst water main under Quadra Street which opened up a six-foot crack in the pavement early Saturday morning damaged a number of basements in houses and stores just south of St. Peter's Road.

The 12-inch main burst about 3:30 a.m. in front of 3919 Quadra, and a torrent of water rushed down a hill toward other homes and the Lake Hill shopping plaza.

One of the worst affected by the flood was Patrick Beggs, 20, who with his wife Dorothy, and dog Prince, rents a basement apartment at 937 Quadra.

Beggs said he was awakened in the night by the dog barking and jumping around. When he got up to investigate, he found about an inch of water on the floor of the suite, with more pouring in from under the door.

Within 20 minutes the apartment was filled to a depth of about three feet with filthy water.

Beggs said he and his wife got out by breaking a bedroom window, because the water was lying so deep against the door it was impossible to get out that way. The water also entered his car, he said.

He and his wife had not been able to rescue any of their possessions, he said. "It all happened so fast, I knew what it was as soon as I saw it. But we just had time to phone the fire department and get out."

After the torrent had been spewing for about half an hour, an emergency waterworks crew turned off the water in the main to stop the flow.

By morning the crew had found the break, removed the section of 55-year-old pipe, and replaced it with a new one.

About 6:30 a.m. the Saanich fire department pumped out the Beggs' home and the other flooded basements.

It was not known exactly how many premises were damaged, but Beggs said he knew of at least two other homes, and he believed two stores in the Lake Hill plaza had also been hit.

Saturday night the Beggs were packing up what they could of their things and moving to a motel for a few days until their suite could be cleaned up.

"The filth had all settled out of the water and is on everything," Beggs said. "I imagine there'll be quite a bit of damage but that's for the insurance agents to figure out."

Owner of the house is Stanley Shaw who lives upstairs, but he is currently out of town.

Retiring Dates Bring Attack

A former Saanich councillor Saturday accused the municipality of making fish of one retiring chief and fowl of another.

"Why are they giving Police Chief Bert Pearson an extension on his retirement date and turning down Fire Chief Joe Sutherland when he suggests the same consideration?" Gregory Cook of 1081 Laburnum asked the Colonist.

Cook was a councillor for three terms during the years 1950 through 1965.

Saanich police commission agreed to extend Pearson's retirement date from Sept. 22 to the end of the year.

A request by Sutherland to extend his retirement date from last Tuesday to the end of the year was turned down by the personnel committee.

Cook said the decision could affect the morale of other employees who wanted to make plans around their retirement dates and good workers could be lost because of it.

"Why make fish of one and fowl of another?" Cook asked. Sutherland has said that, due to changes this year in the Superannuation Act, he would receive $63 a month more in pension if he retired the end of the year instead of this month.

The matter is to come before Saanich council at its regular meeting at 7:30 p.m. Monday.

Cook said he would ask for permission to address council on the issue and said he hoped others who felt the same way would also attend.

Fertility Drug Rapped

BOLTON, England (UPI) — Pauline Grundy, who gave birth to quintuplets a week ago, said she will never again take the fertility drug that led to her multiple pregnancy.

Three of her babies died during the week. "I would never take it again after what I've been through," she said. "I knew right from the start all my babies could die."

"I still don't know all that much about fertility drugs, but I know I wouldn't advise any other woman on whether or not to take it," she said.

Feed It Well

FLOWERING ALMOND (S.B., Esquimalt) — Prunus triloba, the popular dwarf flowering almond, is unusual among the ornamental flowering trees and shrubs in that it blooms much more profusely when pruned annually. It blooms in the spring, and the shoots which bear blossoms should be cut hard back as soon as the flowers start to fade. This will stimulate the production of new shoots during the remaining months of spring and all through the summer, and these will ensure a wealth of bloom the following season. As with all shrubs that are pruned drastically, generous feeding is necessary. A good surface mulch of old rotted manure is best, or use a balanced garden fertilizer plus a surface mulch of peat moss or fir bark.

SEAWEED COMPOST (W.P., Salt Spring) — Yes, you can use seaweed from the shore in your compost heap. After gathering, leave it to rot for a week or so, then add it to your compost heap in four-inch layers, with a sprinkling of good topsoil between, either by itself or with other material from spent crops, fallen leaves, lawn mowings and kitchen vegetable waste. The salt content in seaweed is never excessive or harmful.

SICK TOMATOES (G.W., Cordova Bay) — The spot of rot attacking the bottom of each green tomato is a condition known as blossom-end rot. This is not a "catching" disease but is a physiological disorder, caused by dryness of the soil under the deep roots of the plant, and the rot appears when the roots are unable to supply the leaves with sufficient moisture. Spraying or drenching is no help at all against this particular trouble, as there is no insect or fungus involved. Best treatment is to irrigate your tomato plants slowly and very deeply — some of the more advanced tomatoes may crack open as a result of this watering, but it must be done — then spread a thick mulch of straw, lawn mowings or sawdust over the rooting area between the plants to conserve moisture.

POTATO TOPS (D.W., Saanichton) — I am very much against the practice of breaking down or cutting back the topgrowth of potato plants as long as it remains green and healthy. Even in a season when the foliage is excessive, I think it pays to leave all the foliage on, as every single leaf is a little food factory, hard at work plumping up the tubers beneath. The moment the topgrowth is cut down, the potatoes stop getting any bigger.

Potatoes for immediate consumption may be dug as soon as they are big enough to eat, but these immature "new" potatoes are not good keepers. Maincrop potatoes intended for storing must be allowed to complete their growth.

PERSIAN CYCLAMEN (F. MacL., Victoria) — The cyclamen houseplant you received as a gift last Christmas is ready to be restarted into growth. I presume that when your plant finished blooming, you dried it off slowly by gradually cutting down on its water until the leaves were brown and dead. It is customary to store the bulb in its pot, preferably on its side in a sunny basement window during its annual resting period.

The bulb has been resting long enough now and should be shaken out of its pot and repotted into fresh, purchased potting soil. You can use the same pot if it is well scrubbed.

Keep the repotted bulb in an east or north window and water very sparingly at first, giving only enough to keep the soil just barely moist, then increase as topgrowth develops. This plant remains in bloom much longer in a very cool room, so try to avoid temperatures much higher than 60 degrees.

Art Buchwald

Someone Saves You

There are many great places where you can't write a book, but as far as I'm concerned none compares to Martha's Vineyard.

This is how I manage not to write a book and I pass it on to fledgling authors as well as old timers who have vowed to produce a great work of art this summer.

The first thing you need is lots of paper, carbon, a solid typewriter, preferably electric, and a quiet spot in the house overlooking the water. You get up at six o'clock in the morning and go for a dip in the sea, then you come back and make yourself a hearty breakfast.

By seven you are ready to begin page one, chapter one. You insert a piece of paper in the typewriter and start to type. "It was the best of times..." Suddenly you look out the window and you see a seagull diving for a fish. This is not an ordinary seagull. It seems to have a broken wing and you get up from the desk to observe it on the offshore that somewhere in the book you may want to insert a paper and start over with an original and two carbons. "It was the best of times..."

You look out the window again and you see a sailboat in trouble. You take your binoculars and study the situation carefully. If it gets worse you may have to call the coast guard. But after a half hour of struggling they seem to have things under control.

By this time you remember you were supposed to receive a cheque from the Saturday Review, so you walk down to the post office, pause at the drug store for newspapers, and stop at the hardware store for rubber cement to repair your daughter's raft.

You're back to your desk at one when you remember you haven't had lunch. So you fix yourself a tuna fish sandwich and read the newspapers.

It is now two thirty and you are about to hit the keys when Bill Styron calls. He announces they have just received a load of lobsters at Menemsha and he's driving over to get some before they're all gone. Well, you say to yourself, you can always write a book on the Vineyard, but how often can you get fresh lobster?

So you agree to go with Styron for just an hour.

Two hours later with the thought of fresh lobster as inspiration, you sit down at the typewriter. The doorbell rings and Norma Brustein is standing there in her tennis shoes looking for a fourth for doubles.

You don't want to hurt Norma's feelings so you get your racket and for the next hour play a fierce game of tennis, which is the only opportunity you have had all day of taking your mind off your book.

It is now six o'clock and the kids are back in the house, so there is no sense trying to get work done anymore for that day.

So you put the cover on the typewriter with a secure feeling that no matter how ambitious you are about working there will always be somebody on the Vineyard ready and eager to save you.

Marilyn Beck in Hollywood

Much as he'd dislike it, it looks as if Richard Boone will have to come home again. Dick has sold his Black Point home in Honolulu and is now talking about sending down roots in Florida or in San Francisco where he can be close to his son who is entering Stanford University as a freshman. Dick gives the impression he'd like to be any place but Hollywood. But Hollywood is where Universal intends to shoot his new NBC series if it lands a berth (as it's almost sure to do) on the fall TV lineup. Which means that Boone's either going to have to put up with a lot of commuting, or reconcile himself to putting up with Los Angeles and its peaky smog.

Mort Saut and China Lee have called fins to their less-than-eyebrow marriage. Which shoots another hole in that theory that long premarital togetherness necessarily insures long post-wedding ceremony grooviness.

Myrna Loy has been a visitor in our town this past month. A New York resident these days, she's been bunking at the Chateau Marmont near the Sunset Strip, and finding plenty to keep her busy. No sooner had she completed her co-starring role in ABC's Movie of the Week, Do Not Fold, Spin or Mutilate, than she segued over to Universal to film a TV Movie of the Weekend. It's been good to have Myrna back, and I'm sure she agrees. She told me she so enjoys visiting her old Los Angeles buddies, that she'll be staying around for a while after her work is completed, just for leisure time with friends.

It's getting serious for Mario Thomas and Herb Gardner. Now that she no longer has a TV series to take up all her time and energies, That Girl is discovering how enjoyable it is to have time and energies taken up by the Right Guy.

Mary Tyler Moore and her husband, Grant Tinker, are going to become home owners on our local shores. "We're beach nuts," explained Mary, as she describes the lavish pad they're having constructed on the sands of Malibu.

Dick Clark and his family are also beaching it this summer, and Dick tells me they've now got most of their neighbors involved in their newest ecology hobby, turning used bottles they find along the sand into goblets, ashtrays and such.

Travesty Passing

One of the unmentioned — at least by me — casualties of the new college life-style is the fraternity-sorority system. It is going in most colleges, and almost gone in others. In my time, it seemed as permanent as a dean's pipe; now, it surely will not survive this decade.

In one of my first columns, more than a quarter-century ago, I attacked this system as a rude travesty of what college ought to be; at that time, I thought I was splitting against the wind but the wind turned faster than anyone could have anticipated.

The fraternity-sorority system was based on a false premise and so it had to collapse eventually, as all institutionalized untruths must do. It was based on the premise that young men and women who had things in common ought to live together and play together.

But college is, or should be, the place where young men and women who have little background in common except their youth ought to learn more about different kinds of people before they get into the great world and perpetuate the errors of their elders. It is a place for broadening one's horizon, not constricting it.

The old-fashioned fraternity and sorority simply manipulated the facts and thus learned nothing from it. The light blondes from Minnesota lived in one house, and the dark Jews from Brooklyn in another, and the odd Hindu-stant stayed in a room at the student centre, and they joined loyalties only at football games and synthetically unified Class Days.

The kids today want none of that, and rightly so. They know that you learn little from "your own kind" except that your own kind is indubitably superior to any other kind. And they also have found out that it's damned dull to spend most of your time with people who look and sound and act exactly like yourself. Ethnic constipation sets in fast.

Now they are all down at the student union building, because that's where the foreign students are and interesting people from all over the world. They live where they feel like and with whom they feel like, because that is what growing up consists of — exploration, diversity, the shedding of insulation.

Their parents wanted them to be with "the right sort." They are finding out for themselves that the right sort come from everywhere, in all shapes and shades; and the wrong sort are precisely those who think there is only one right sort. If their parents had learned that lesson, the word "fraternity" might still have its noble connotation, not just its snobbish one.

Homemade Smokers Make Salmon Tasty

Vancouver Island waters are teeming with salmon these days and the biggest problem faced by fishermen is not how to catch them, but what to do with them after they catch them.

Smoking them is one of the tasty answers and if you don't want to be bothered smoking them you can always take them out to Roger Beckett at Creed's Sport Fishing at Brentwood and get them custom smoked for you at a nominal charge.

On recent trips we have met two anglers who have come up with their own design for a smokehouse.

Portable Smoker

Art and Bobbie Klohn, who have a waterfront home on Kaituma Road at Sooke, have built themselves a combination outdoor barbecue, grill and cold and hot smoker, which will do everything from smoking sides of bacon to cold smoking a salmon so it will keep for months.

Cliff Whittingham, who has been camping and fishing at Miracle Beach for the past 17 years, has built himself a portable smoker out of two sheets of four-by-eight plywood.

He can smoke 14 five-pound coho at one time on his smoker, and when he finishes camping he just folds it up and takes it home in the trunk of his car.

Drum Fire

For smoke he uses a fire made out of a five-gallon drum, with 18 inches of four-inch pipe running to the plywood smokehouse. He has tacked lathes around the inside of the plywood to hold the racks.

Cliff recommends a slow smoke lasting at least 10 hours.

He fillets his salmon, then sprinkles it with a mixture of salt and brown sugar, adding a dash of vinegar. He leaves the mixture on the fillets overnight, or for at least six hours, and then it is ready to smoke.

Slow Type

This is a slow barbecue-type of smoking with a little heat and the smoked fish is ready to eat as soon as it is removed from the smokehouse. Chilled it will keep several days.

If you really want a treat try canning it just as you would fresh salmon. Then serve it to friends at Christmas-time.

Art and Bobbie Klohn's smoker-barbecue-grill is a handsome chunk of patio lawn furniture and was a winter building project for them.

Art was a butcher at Mc Bride, B.C., before retiring to Victoria via Lake Cowichan, and he has had plenty of experience with smokehouses.

Chimney Slots

The smoker is made of stones and mortar and stands 6½ feet tall. He put slots in the chimney eight inches from the top and in these he can place bars on which he can either hang his fish or meat to be smoked, or lay a rack on the bars.

It is two-feet square on the inside and he has a fire box running out about three feet from the chimney. Above the firebox he has a cast iron plate, three-quarters of an inch thick and 28 inches by 37 inches, on which he can grill steaks.

"I can even smoke-cook a roast on the rack in the chimney," says Art.

Thick Slab

The entire smoker sits on a five-inch thick slab of cement.

To cook on the grill plate he uses just beach bark for fuel, but when he wants to smoke in the chimney he uses a fire of ordinary charcoal briquets, which last for about three hours without refueling, and then he sprinkles green alder chips over the briquets to make smoke.

He is very particular about the amount of heat (or lack of it) in the chimney, and he hangs an oven thermometer inside to keep track of the heat.

Already he has smoked a side of bacon successfully in his new smoker. This called for a brine of 50 per cent pickling salt (or non-iodized fine salt), 50 per cent brown sugar and spices to please. He brined the side of bacon 20 days, stacking it and rubbing it, and then smoked it for 23 hours at no more than 120 degrees, and for the 24th hour at 130 to 140 degrees, providing just enough heat "to set it."

Brine Mixture

"If I were going to smoke fish, I would use a similar 50-50 mixture for brine, add the spices to please, and brine it for four to five hours," Art says.

He would use the same cool smoke process for 12 to 14 hours and then increase the heat to 140 degrees for the last hour to set it up. Then he would hang the fish fillets to dry in a cool place with no draft.

But, he emphasizes a main-on cool-smoked fish that is not ready to eat. It would have to be steamed or broiled like Alaska black cod.

Salmon Run

To smoke-barbecue a salmon he would bring the heat up to 180 to 200 degrees after broiling it the same as before. He said that would take seven or eight hours, and then he could sit right down and eat the barbecue-smoked salmon.

With the pink and coho salmon run just starting in the adjacent Sooke waters Art and Bobbie will be using that new smoker a lot in the next few weeks.

Alfred Boerger, a specialist in tagged stamps is warning collectors that many genuine phosphor tagged stamps are being tampered with and the phosphor ink coating has been removed by the acid fume process to produce what might be mistaken for an untagged error.

Great numbers of these so-called errors have been offered on the market during the last two years, often at a discount ranging up to 25 per cent, or in some cases, in an exchange deal.

Some methods of detection suggested by Boerger are "paper often becomes yellowed or tinted. Paper becomes brittle and simple handling of coils or multiples may cause them to separate. Such multiples break apart at the perforations and on the bogus stamp it will appear as cut by scissors. There is no gum disturbance but when compared with a genuine copy the bogus item may be a bit off-color.

Three new stamps were issued by Britain on August 25 and 26, shows soldier, sailor and airman in British 1921 uniforms also a nurse of Queen Alexandra's Imperial Military Nursing Service.

This eight-ounce stamp commemorates the 50th anniversary of the British Legion. The 7½p, marking the 1900th anniversary of the City of York depicts a Roman centurion and coat of arms in seven colors.

The 3p, Century of Rugby Football Union shows players of a century ago in action; in seven colors. All are photographed by Harrison and Sons; slightly larger than double size; per. 18 by 14 and all with phosphor lines. The current 10p stamp was released August 11 reduced in size and in reddish-brown color, to be included in the low value range.

This was one to simplify production which now will be in panes of 200. The design will be the same Machin head of the Queen; photograph by Harrison, with two phosphor lines.

Railway Brings Hopes, Problems to Fort Nelson

The Shattered Psyche of a Boom Town

Fort Nelson has the typical shattered psyche of a boom town.

It resents the apparent indifference of Victoria, and indeed all outsiders, to its needs. Yet it is tremendously unsure of its ability to cope under local administration with its own problems.

Most of the residents swear they would never return to big city life. But they confess to being hardly able to await the arrival of all the so-called advantages of a developing economy. New industry. Perhaps a pulp mill. And little is said of the problems that are bound to follow.

In the past this community of 4,000 has been largely ignored—remaining just a bright spot on the Alaska Highway.

Now that's all past and the residents of Fort Nelson can tell you the precise date when their practically limitless future prospects become reality—Sept. 10, 1971.

On that day the first Pacific Great Eastern railway train officially arrives in the community, turning Fort Nelson overnight into a major trans-shipment point for truck traffic bound for the Yukon and Alaska, and raising the prospect that it will one day become the major distribution centre for the entire Western Arctic.

"The town has to grow—we're on our way," says leading local businessman Hugh Gilbert. He predicts freight rates will be halved with the coming of the railway. Everything sold in town will be affected.

That means everything from milk which now costs 44

cents a quart to regular gasoline which sells in Fort Nelson for 62 cents a gallon.

"It seems unbelievable," Gilbert says, "but people in this town are going to be able to buy goods out of Vancouver for the first time, when they have always previously bought out of Edmonton."

Even brighter prospects for B.C. buying loom in the future, however, Gilbert adds, if agreement can be reached between Ottawa and Victoria to build an all-year-round highway to Fort Simpson, about 300 miles farther on, in the Northwest Territories.

This means goods could be transferred to barges on the Mackenzie River, for shipment to the Arctic, at least two weeks earlier in the spring—and later in the fall—than is now possible through Alberta via Great Slave Lake.

"We could supply our own north, which means the Yukon and a whole slice of the Northwest Territories, out of B.C. rather than out of Alberta," says Gilbert.

Harry Clark, proprietor of a local plumbing firm and mayor of the provisional village administration established by provincial cabinet order last May, agrees the Fort Simpson road as well as further PGE extensions are a key to the future prosperity of the community.

Fort Nelson, he says, can become "one of the nicest small cities in the North" if it attacks problems of housing, sewage disposal and water supply which are a relic of an out-of-touch provincial administration.

Some residents, according to Clark, are still afraid the arrival of local government will mean heavy increase in taxation. He says: "Our taxes went up this year and we haven't even taken over yet. But I feel we've been baby-sat by Victoria long enough. It's time we started looking after ourselves, deciding what we want done, and doing it."

Housing in the community is at a premium and five local firms selling mobile homes bear testimony to the slump in private home construction in Fort Nelson.

Bill Hardie, a local contractor, tells why. "I don't think they realize the potential for growth here on the outside. We have four carpenters who live here all year round. But in summer we could use 100 carpenters. I try to avoid building homes because the tradesmen just aren't available and it costs too much to bring men in from Vancouver to do the job."

Serviced lots are also in short supply. The last auction held in Fort Nelson by the provincial lands department saw 58 lots sold and at least 100 would-be purchasers disappointed.

Dick Armstrong, the postmaster, has lived in Fort Nelson for 25 years and remembers when it was little more than a collection of shacks around the airport located a couple of miles north of the present town. He's now a member of the provisional village council.

Any firm with the necessary capital, Armstrong says, could come into Fort Nelson and build 100 houses in full expectation of selling or renting every one of them as soon as it was completed. So far no developers have come in although Westcoast Transmission has built some nice townhouses for its own employees.

One thing appears certain: Fort Nelson is going to double in size in the next few years. The provincial government estimates it could have 10,000 residents—the figure at present is 4,000—within five to seven years.

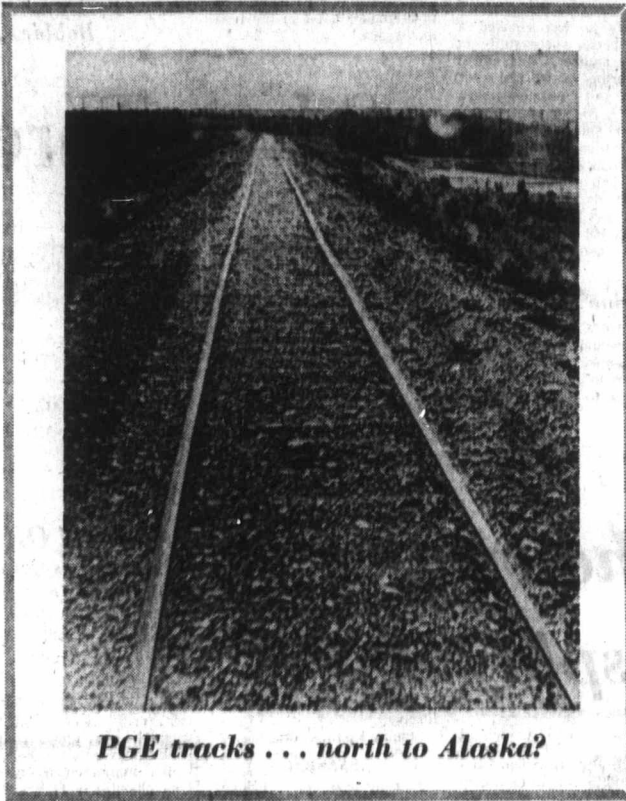

Others, like Armstrong and Clark, are more conservative. They predict a growth in that period to about 8,000. But they also know the local 40-bed hospital must be enlarged, the school system is crowded to its limits, and water supply and sewage disposal must be brought up to acceptable levels of service.

They also have the youthful spirit of optimism that seems to flourish in the north and are confident they can meet the challenge of a bright future.

the first time because he will oversee maintenance of the 250-mile section of track. Left, is engineer Ed Knuff.

Laying PGE Steel True Test of Man

It takes a special kind of stubbornness in a man to live and work "way out" in a wilderness construction camp in northern B.C.

On top of that, he must either be dedicated to the job or extremely fond of the folding green stuff, money.

But without the stubbornness, the other qualities don't count. He'll work a while and drift away. Perhaps he'll arrive, look around and leave immediately.

Imagine a seven-day week, 36 hours straight time. Seventy to eighty hours and more with overtime.

Laying steel on the 250-mile Pacific Great Eastern railway extension from Fort St. John to Fort Nelson in January at temperatures of 54 degrees below zero.

Soaked by downpours which lasted six weeks in summer. Bitten by insects. And on five days working 12 hours at hard physical labor under a broiling sun.

"If you come here and make up your mind to be happy then you'll be happy—I am. Lots of the other boys are happy, too."

That's Rigo Marra talking. He's one of the dedicated, one who says he enjoys his job as much as a boy playing with an electric train set.

He's in charge of the construction gangs on this PGE extension and when the job is done he'll take over maintenance of the track with the title of roadmaster.

That's why Rigo spares no effort to see the job is done right, which means his way, now.

Born in a village 30 miles from Naples, he left Italy at 18 to come to Canada in 1949, working first for the CPR as a section hand in the Kootenays and then going on to build railways in other parts of Canada, the U.S. and Australia.

Rigo's father railroaded in Canada, so did an uncle, and his brother is a CPR roadmaster stationed at Kamloops. "Now my son is talking about it and says as soon as he's grown up he'd like to come and work with his daddy and that pleases me very much."

Tough but fair, that's the way Rigo operates. He is out on the job all the time, supervising every operation, riding the big machines used in track laying, checking with other gangs by radio telephone.

"You don't fool around with Rigo," says Carl Olson, the first-aid man on Gang 131. "He doesn't let anything slip by that will affect production. But the boys, once they get used to him, know he's a good fellow, because he's fair. Rigo has no favorites, no matter what race or religion. If a man doesn't do his stuff he gets a dressing down."

It's fortunate that this is the case because 85 per cent of the 100 or so workers on Gang 131 are Portuguese.

Most of the Portuguese speak little English. Some of the Canadian-born workers resent these stolid foreigners who come here to work hard, live frugally, and in most cases send their earnings home to families who remain in Portugal.

One of those who have tried to bridge the gap between the old world and the new is Carl Olson, a quiet grandfaterly man who calls himself a Minnesota Swede but farmed for years outside Fort St. John before bad times forced him to take a job with a "way out" outfit a few years ago.

His wife runs the farm now and Carl goes "outside" every now and again to help out. The last time he left camp was seven months ago.

The Portuguese workers, says Carl, are typical of those who work on construction to earn a stake for themselves. "They like that folding stuff, and work to save so they can buy themselves some property back in Portugal or a fruit farm down in the Fraser Valley to provide security for their old age."

The resentment sometimes directed at the Portuguese, he adds, is based upon a belief that these emigrants from a foreign land are taking jobs away from Canadians. But it ignores the fact that native-born Canadians "probably won't work way out in the wilderness for long stretches of time."

Carl says: "You have to be a pretty stubborn individual to stay out here in the swamps for months and months on end. The Portuguese work seven days a week with perhaps just a week off at Christmas if they stay in Canada. Or once every two or three years they go back to their families in Portugal for a visit of two or three months. Then back again, working out here in the wilderness."

During a recent visit there was a brief flare-up of tempers among Portuguese workers over the quality of food served in the mess car. When it was over, a Portuguese foreman recalled that he came from the same village as the principal complainant. There, he said, the man's family was so poor they bought chicken's feet and entrails as food.

By any standards, PGE living is good. T-bone steaks and sirloin tip roasts are rotated on the daily menus with chicken, turkey, roast pork, and cold meat. The men have comfortable beds and hot showers.

"Personally I couldn't afford to eat that way at home," says Rigo Marra. Room and board costs them $29 a fortnight and laborers earn $2.27 an hour, with time-and-a-half paid for anything over 60 hours a week.

"We don't hold people here," Rigo says. "It's their own choice. But we're out in the bush so why not work? I would like very much to give the men a day off, but if we did they would complain bitterly. We want them to be happy but, if we let them, they would work from sunup to sundown. And I believe they have got to have some rest."

And when a handful of Portuguese workers quit the following day, the reason they gave was that they were not allowed to work enough overtime.

"I don't think money means that much," says Rigo. "You can have a million dollars. But if you're not happy, what's the good of it to you? That's my personal feeling. I take care of my job and my job takes care of me and my family."

But the Portuguese workers, whatever their motives, are helping to build Canada's north while building security for themselves. It's a deal both ways, good for them and for Canadians, too.

Can Fischer Teach Soviet Chess Masters?

Question of the week: Can Bobby Fischer get by Tigran Petrosian and become the first player from the West in decades to take a crack at the world chess championship?

I say yes and am basing my assessment on the four games Fischer played against the former world champion from Moscow in last year's World vs. Soviet Union match.

The score: Fischer, two wins, two draws, three points. Petrosian, two draws, two losses, one point.

A pretty convincing performance by the Los Angeles grandmaster, and just how convincing can be seen in Games 1 and 2 of the match won by Fischer, our games of the week.

It must also be remembered

Checkmate By Ray Kerr

that at the time of the match, Fischer was considered rusty and actually gave way to

Denmark's Bent Larsen on Board 1.

Petrosian, on the other hand, had been playing regularly and was considered to be in peak form at the time of the match.

But right off the bat, in the first game, Fischer stamped of Petrosian into a foolish move with his king, then pounded him mercilessly right up to the bitter end.

A classic triumph in any

The second-game win was completely different as

Fischer, with black pieces, attacked a pawn-plus, then hung on tensely and — with a little co-operation from the former world title — posted another valuable victory.

Having disposed of the world championship semifinal in Fischer's favor, I might as well go ahead and predict the winner of the match between Fischer and Boris Spassky, the current world champion from the Soviet Union.

It will be Fischer, but the 24-game match will not be decided until the final three games — and may be even tighter than that.

I don't agree with my friend

Larry Evans of Reno, Nev., who says that should Fischer get by Petrosian, he'll defeat

Spassky, quite handsly.

Winning the match by about the 20th game.

I think Spassky is just too good to be had that easily.

Actually, they are small, transparent jellyfish left high but not quite dry by retreating tide. (Ellis Shipman)

Bennett's Canary Gulps Ottawa's Cat—Again

By IAN STREET
Legislature Reporter

The smile on the face of Premier Bennett tells most of the story. The provincial canary once more has swallowed the federal cat.

Nothing is said for the record, of course, but the message is clear. These federal bureaucrats and politicians have been caught sleeping at the switch. Again. It's becoming almost monotonous. But, pleasant as this prospect is to dwell on, there is always an underlying sense of frustration.

B.C. — thanks mainly to the foresight of Bennett — has come up with a grand design for northern development. But it can't be carried out without Ottawa's co-operation, for good reason.

Bombs Protest Convict Shooting

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Two State Department of Corrections offices in San Francisco and Sacramento were heavily damaged by bombs Saturday in what an underground group said was "one outraged response to the assassination of George Jackson."

A third bomb explosion wrecked the State Department of Rehabilitation office in San Mateo. Investigators said the San Mateo blast did not appear related to the seemingly co-ordinated attacks on the two prison system offices.

There were no injuries. Brother George Jackson was killed with five other men in a San Quentin Prison break attempt a week ago.

The bombings came on the day of Jackson's funeral in the same wooden church in Oakland where rites were conducted a year ago for his younger brother, Jonathan.

Jonathan was killed in the August, 1970, Marin County Courthouse shootout in which a judge and three abductors died.

A letter, signed "Weather Underground" and delivered to the San Francisco Examiner, claimed responsibility.

Cariboo's Ralph Dean New B.C. Archbishop

Ralph Dean, Bishop of the Cariboo, Saturday night was elected Archbishop of the Anglican Church for British Columbia and the Yukon.

It is the church's top post in the west area. Dean, one of six bishops eligible for the job, was elected in Vancouver on the first ballot. The election was made necessary by the retirement July 1 of Archbishop Godfrey Gowen.

In the past votes have been cast only by the bishops. This marked the first time that other clergy and lay people had an equal say in the outcome. About 18 votes were cast.

Dean will be installed as archbishop Oct. 20 at his own church, St. Paul's Cathedral in Kamloops.

Explosion suddenly flares as Nanaimo firemen close in on flames, smoke

Death Toll Between 70, 95

BRINDISI, Italy (AP) — A raging fire on a giant Greek ferryboat drove more than 1,000 persons overboard Saturday off southeast Italy. Between 70 and 95 were reported dead or missing after the tourist-packed vessel was abandoned.

Awakened at dawn, many panicked passengers leaped into the Adriatic Sea in their nightclothes. The fire began with an explosion of natural gas in the kitchen of the 11,332-ton Heleanna, called "the largest ferry in the world" by its owners.

The Italian navy reported 34 bodies were recovered and 37 persons were missing. The port authority at Brindisi had differing figures — 25 bodies found and 70 persons missing.

The Navy Ministry in Rome reported that navy and merchant ships and dozens of small fishing boats rescued 1,086 persons. The ministry said 330 persons were hospitalized, 64 with "rather serious" injuries. Most of the injured suffered burns or bone fractures.

Most of the passengers were said to be Italian, Greek, German, French or Swiss. The ship owner and the Greek Merchant Marine declined to release a passenger list until names could be checked with survivors in Italy.

The empty ferry, smoke still rising from its charred decks, was towed Saturday night to the harbor of Brindisi.

Owner of the ferry is C. S. Ethymiadis, known as Greece's "ferryboat king." The ship left the Greek port

Ziggy's Coming Out Goes Off Smoothly

CHICAGO (UPI) — Brookfield Zoo threw a coming out party Saturday for a mean-tempered, wrinkled and somewhat sad looking elephant with one broken tusk.

For Ziggy the event signalled the end of 30 years of solitary confinement. For hundreds of well-wishers and zoo officials it was the happy culmination of three years of raising funds to try to solve Ziggy's predicament. Ziggy seemed unimpressed by their enthusiasm.

He was chained in a cage inside the zoo's pachyderm house after he attacked a keeper in 1941.

NANAIMO — Fire gutted a two-storey building in downtown Nanaimo Saturday night in a spectacular blaze which could run damage costs up to $500,000.

Huge palls of dense black smoke rose hundreds of feet into the evening sky as 40 firemen fought to save three businesses which share the building.

After four hours the blaze was under control but damage to Edwards Tire, Hank's Bicycle Shop and the weekly newspaper, the Nanaimo Times, was expected to total about $500,000.

The fire broke out in Edwards Tire at about 6:15 p.m. and spread from the company's Terminal Avenue frontage up to the bicycle shop which faces Wallace Street. The Times, next door to the bicycle shop, was the last to fall to the fire.

Nanaimo fire chief Albert Dunn said it was the worst fire in the city in 10 years.

A crowd of about 4,000 on-lookers hampered police as people continually surged closer towards the flames, despite the threat of the building collapsing.

Several minor explosions rocked the building as the fire reached chemicals in the tire factory but no one was hurt.

After battling the blaze for about four hours, firemen had it under control. Several weary firemen had a lucky escape from injury when a huge neon sign crashed through the roof of the building to the floor below.

The firemen, fighting the flames on the lower Terminal Avenue level, scampered to safety after shouted warnings from others.

At 10:15 p.m., Chief Dunn said the fire was under control but his men would be staying on the scene all night.

"It's a dirty one. Hundreds and hundreds of hundreds of tires are still burning in the building," he said.

Dunn said he did not know the cause of the blaze. It is understood that firemen reached the burning building before an alarm was raised. Several firemen saw the black smoke rising from the building as they rested at the fire station six blocks away.

They alerted other fire crews and went to the blaze. Soon after the start of the fire, RCMP closed Terminal Avenue — which is also part of the Trans-Canada Highway — and rerouted traffic.

By 10 p.m., the street was awash with water from the fire.

Police gave repeated warnings to the crowd as the explosion continued.

France Cancels Nuclear Tests

PAPEETE, Tahiti (UPI) — France will not explode any more nuclear devices in the Pacific this year, defence sources said Saturday. The sources said the thermonuclear blast over Mururoa Atoll southeast of here Aug. 15 satisfied scientists that no further explosions in their 1971 program were now necessary.

Ilyushin Crashes Into Sea; 31 Dead

COPENHAGEN (UPI) — A Hungarian Ilyushin 18 airliner with 34 passengers and crew members aboard crashed into the sea off Copenhagen Saturday night, one minute before it was to land at Kastrup airport.

The plane was found by a helicopter about one hour after the crash. The pilot located the badly damaged airliner near the island of Salt-holm. The pilot reported one of the wings had been torn off and was floating nearby while the tail showed above the water.

The three survivors, one woman and two men, were described as being out of danger in a Copenhagen hospital.

Skindivers brought up the six bodies from the plane wreckage, which was located by a Danish navy helicopter in shallow waters about four miles off the Danish coast.

The Ilyushin 18, a Russian built, four-engine, turbo-prop aircraft which is used by most East European airlines, belonged to the Hungarian airline Magyar. The plane carried 34 passengers and a crew of 10.

It was flying from Oslo to Budapest with scheduled stops in Copenhagen and East Berlin when it crashed some eight miles short of the runway at Kastrup airport.

The duty officer in the Kastrup control tower said the pilot had received his landing orders and "everything appeared okay" when the aircraft suddenly disappeared from the radar screen. The tower called the aircraft on radio but got no answer.

Bus Plunges Killing 23

DURBAN, South Africa (UPI) — A crowded African bus plunged off a bridge over a freeway Saturday killing 23 persons and injuring 64 others.

Police said the bus was going to nearby Umhlangi, an African area, when it crashed through a safety barrier and fell about 30 feet onto a car and a lorry driving on the South Coast Freeway. One occupant of the lorry was killed.

Three Brothers Shot To Death

DRIGGS, Idaho (AP) — Three teen-aged brothers were shot to death and a relative and a city marshal seriously wounded early Saturday on a county road in an isolated section of eastern Idaho.

Teton County Sheriff Arden Stevens said Ruben DeLuna, 19; Robert DeLuna, Jr., 16; and Antonio DeLuna, 17, were killed as they sat in the family car. A cousin, Richard DeLuna, 19, was hospitalized.

Driggs City Marshal Melvin Jones, 38, was shot without warning seconds after he arrived at the scene of the shooting. He was in fair condition following surgery.

Stevens said he had a young man and woman in custody. He said the DeLuna car was parked when someone opened fire, killing the three youths. Richard DeLuna was shot in the head, but managed to run to a telephone.

Deputy Marshal Darryl Zohner and Dr. Kitchner Head, a Driggs physician, arrived and hit the gunman over the head in the dark.

Cong's Rockets Fizzle —South Vietnam Votes

SAIGON (UPI) — President Nguyen Van Thieu voted in South Vietnam's first National Assembly elections since 1967 Sunday and let it be known that the presidential elections will be held Oct. 8 with him as the only candidate.

Communists fired two rockets early Sunday at Saigon's Tan Son Nhut airport, but the explosives failed to fire and caused no casualties or damage.

Cobble Hill Event Crowded

Fair Possibly 'Best So Far'

CORBLE HILL — The 62nd annual fall fair Saturday was an unequalled success. There were more entries than in 1970 and by late afternoon it looked as if last year's attendance figure of 1,500 would be topped.

ers' Institute, Jim Boyles said I think we'll have more people this year than we had last year. Everything went well. It has been a very good fair and possibly the best so far.

Visitors crowded the Cobble Hill community hall, which was laden with a great variety of indoor exhibits ranging from hay, turnips, honey, home baking, flowers to photographs, various art displays and needlecraft. Among the visitors were former B.C. lieutenant governor George Pearkes and Mrs. Pearkes who enjoyed themselves during the unofficial visit.

Outdoor activities consisted of various 4-H contests, judging of all types of livestock and beef cattle. Judge Alex Turner from the Victoria area praised the good standard of beef cattle. One of the highlights in the outdoor ring was a special show of highland cattle with 14 entries. One of the competitors — George Prud'Homme of Duncan said "the highland cattle show was just as good as any on the mainland."

He said high shipping costs at $200 per truck discouraged mainland breeders from coming.

Another special attraction was a day-long horsemanship with competitors from different island centres. Two families each with several children, engaged in a friendly rivalry as to the number of entries and prizes.

Mr. and Mrs. John Stewart and their children from Cobble Hill had a total of 66 entries covering practically every category of the prize list and took 10 top prizes. However, Mr. and Mrs. Bill Barton with their children from Chemainus did even better. Although they only had entered in 44 classes they won 13 prizes.

Communism Foe To Speak

NANAIMO — The man who called Trudeau a communist in a controversial publication of the Canadian League of Rights, the Canadian Intelligence Service, will be speaking in Nanaimo at the Tally Ho Tuesday at 8 p.m.

Patrick Walsh, who claims to be a former RCMP undercover agent and an expert on the evils of communism, has just returned from a world anti-communist league conference at Manila.

He will speak on Trudeau and the FLQ, drugs and youth, and "the opportunities for youth disaster."

Walsh is research director for the Canadian League of Rights which is based in Fiesherston, Ontario, and writes articles on subversion and communism.

PORT ALBERNI — Fourteen students from three B.C. universities — UBC, Simon Fraser and Victoria will begin a five-day study of environmental forestry, as part of a 17-day Centennial of Forestry Monday.

In the past the festival has sponsored university forestry graduate students from all parts of the world to study the forestry operations in B.C. This year only one of the 14 students is a forestry student. The other participants come from the various faculties of the three universities.

Monday and Tuesday will be taken up with lectures and a visit to Masachie Lake research station. Wednesday, the group will go on to Duncan to see the forest museum there and then by bus to Port Alberni with stops at Cameron Lake and MacMillan Park.

In the afternoon the students will visit the sawmill and plywood divisions of MacMillan Bloedel in Port Alberni and hear a program to be presented by Local 1-65 of the International Woodworkers of America.

Thursday morning, a visit will be made to Franklin River logging division and in the afternoon the students will visit the forestry-fisheries program at Carnation Creek.

The visit will end Friday morning with a tour of the 36-million-acre Bloedel pulp operation, before the delegates return to Vancouver, where they will visit the loggers sports show at the PNE in the evening.

Two-Week Communication Gap

Phone Service Loss Costly To North Galiano Business

By MARY BACKLUND

GALIANO ISLAND — Some of the polish comes off progress when it means some people have to suffer.

So it would seem to residents in North Galiano, who have had their telephone service cut for about two weeks while work crews widen and blacktop the main road between Galiano and North Galiano.

The telephone were cut Aug. 13 and came back to life for a brief period Aug. 18, then silence. Work crews restored communications Friday but the 100 residents, who operate 40 telephones, feel the cuts were costly.

Ray Bell, the storekeeper at Spanish Hills Store, said that he had to make three trips to the south end of the island, 17 miles, to call in his orders to his wholesalers.

Jim Rogers, owner of Valhalla campsites and cottages, says that he has lost a lot of business as he has not been able to take reservations by the phone and people were not willing to drive to his campsites and take a chance on there being vacancies.

Frank Reader of Madrona Lodge said he also had not been able to receive calls, lost business.

Bill Stafford, of Salishan said that he has been fully booked since the beginning of June and had not lost much.

In the north of Galiano Island where the fish camp is, owners Reggie and Verna Hume were so busy that they didn't have time to speak to anyone but the cut proved a real hardship for them. They have had to drive to the south end of the island to telephone their orders to the wholesalers and they said they could ill afford the time.

In an emergency they would have only had fishing boat radios for contact — if any boats were in.

All residents were aware of the fact that in order to have their road widened and the dangerous turns taken out, they must suffer some. But it was hard to take when they had no way of communicating with the rest of the world.

The club's secretary-treasurer, Arnold Fairhurst, said proceeds from the event will be earmarked for the camp of the handicapped, which is the club's main project.

There will be five starting points and distances between them and the finish at the Kiwanis Park will range from one-and-a-half miles to 22 miles.

The various points and starting times will be: Nitinat Camp, 22 miles, 5 a.m.; Cayuse Camp, 14 miles, 7 a.m.; Youtou, 10 miles, 9 a.m.; Gordon Bay, seven miles, 9 a.m.; and Cayuse and Castaway Resort, one-and-a-half miles, 11 a.m.

Program for Retarded May Repeat

Recreation Idea a Hit

COURTENAY — A special summer recreational program has proved such a success that it will probably be repeated next year.

The program was sponsored by Beaufort Association for Retarded Children, with assistance from the Courtenay parks and recreation committee.

A group of retarded children has been participating in the summer recreational program since Aug. 2. The children, aged four to 14 participated in swimming under the direction of qualified instructors, walks-around the park after lunch, and another swim before returning home.

The program was the idea of Mrs. Betty Landers, who has been the kindergarten teacher for the association for some years. It is but one of the many innovations she has initiated during her years as a teacher.

Assistance in the project was given by Mrs. Ian Mac-sted, assistant teacher, and Lynne Mounier, Lynda Edgetta, Norma McCaffery, Mrs. J. Glazner and Miss Shonnet McLeod.

The two admitted breaking into the medical associates building and also a poster shop.

Three posters were stolen from the poster store.

PARKSVILLE — Items of a total retail value of $4,200 were stolen in a burglary at Janssen's Jewelry store in Parksville this week.

The thief gained entry by forcing a rear door of the shop and stolen items included 106 rings and 32 watches.

Also taken was a 600-pound safe which contained nothing

Fortunately the proprietor had removed a number of valuable diamond rings for safekeeping before closing the store or the loss would have been much greater. Loss of the items stolen was not covered by insurance.

Retiring City Clerk Bows Out in Style

PORT ALBERNI — About 40 aldermen, former aldermen, mayors, and senior civic officials, past and present, gathered to honor retiring city clerk Dennis Thain Friday night at Echo Centre. Thain retired after more than 20 years of service to the city of Port Alberni.

Thain was presented with a golf cart and set of clubs. Amid laughter, Thain assured the group he already had a foursome set up for first thing Monday morning.

Former mayors Lorin Jordan and Les Hammer joined Mayor Fred Bishop in warm praise of Thain's years of hard work. Bishop said Thain came up with compromise solutions that helped greatly to make the amalgamation of the cities of Alberni and Port Alberni possible.

A message from the Attorney-General of British Columbia

"This week you'll be seeing and hearing newspaper, radio and television messages about safe driving.

Your provincial government has undertaken this campaign because, frankly, it's high time that we all came to grips with the rising problems of death and injury on our highways.

We are attempting to provide as much information as we can, on such key subjects as impaired driving, the use of seat belts, and safe driving habits that may someday save the lives of you and your family.

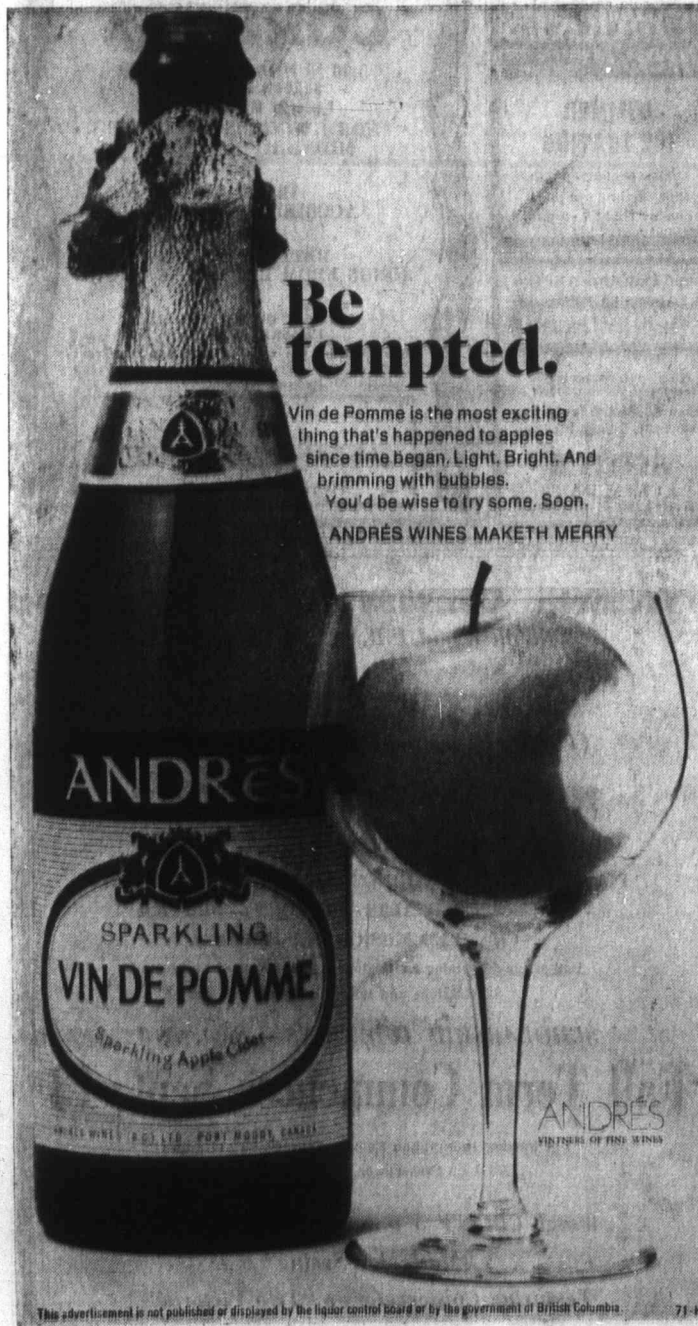

There's a long Labour Day weekend coming up. We want this year's holiday to be the safest ever. But we need your help. Please try to follow the advice our campaign is offering. Keep your seat belts buckled. Never drink and drive, and always handle your vehicle safely and sensibly.

Holiday Song in Minor Key

I never expected to go to Shuswap Lake this summer. I was just going to stay quietly at home with my two dogs—I had two at the beginning of July, but there is only one now—and look after my house and garden, and swim, and read, and write the odd story or two.

But tragedy struck, and things didn't work out that way.

Her name was Comfi. She was part spaniel and part, I thought, wild fox! Red gold, with a fine plummy tail of which we were very proud, a little white face, and four white shoes. Aged seven, only seven, and I had had her since she was eight weeks old and 12 inches long.

Suddenly she was ill, and in spite of everything four of Victoria's leading veterinarians could do, she went away.

My generous and understanding family, who had had their cabin on the Shuswap reserved for some time, insisted that I go with them. So I handed little Russet, the cocker, abruptly lonesome and bewildered, over to a kind friend who knows him and knows about dogs, tossed a bathing-suit and a pair of shorts into a suitcase, and left a long.

It's a beautiful lake. The cabin faced on lawn, and the water was only a few yards away. Cedar and cottonwood trees shaded all from a blazing sun, the first truly summer weather any of us have had this whole year. In the early dawn the water was like a pearl, and in the evening, just before the dark came down, the light was a luminous peacock-green, infinitely subtle in color, infinitely soothing.

We had our boat, and with it we took the youngsters water-skiing, or, alone and quiet, chuffed out into the middle of the lake at 4 p.m., drinkies time, turned off the motor and drifted on the bright mirror while we quaffed iced gin and lime in tall glasses, and the world receded. Almost. Nature has, indubitably, a power for healing. So has moral support. These were lovely hours, and I was grateful for them.

Often we went exploring. All around the perimeter of the lake are charming little curving beaches, sandy, tree-girt, and happily isolated. One in particular became our favorite spot, because there was a small crescent of fine sand, a screen of willows, and an icy creek which delta-ed into the lake and provided an invigorating cold douche in ten-warm water.

On all these outings we had the two other family dogs with us. Perri, the tiny toy-terrier-dachshund cross, who has graced these pages before, and Reina, the lovely yellow lab, both of whom splashed with gay abandon in the shallows.

The camp had all sorts of dogs. There was a delightful collie, large, glossy and dignified, from down the road. There was an infinitesimal Maltese named Samantha, with her hair tied away from her bright eyes with ribbons. There was a young police dog, a fat and elderly black lab, a funny little brown pekinese-cross, and various others. But the prize, I thought, was the shining black and white border collie belonging to the owners of the lodge and the cabins. This was Skipper, who was, without doubt, the busiest and most responsible person on the place.

All day long, no matter what was toward, Skipper had to be there running things. If the speed boats took off with skiers up, it wasn't legal unless Skipper tore down the dock to see them away. If, from here, he caught sight of something going on further along the beach, back he raced to get in on that! In between managing camp affairs, he hunted up sticks for people to throw for him, so that he was in and out of the water, the entire day. A most enchanting creature, interested in everything.

(Comfi was interested in everything. If I gardened, trundling the wheelbarrow here and there, she walked beside it, hoping that something would eventuate which would include her. If I sat weeding the path, or planting petunias, she sat beside me, her questing nose six inches from my hands, and every few minutes a sharp little bark would remind me that the business of importance was not to bother with weeds or flowers and such nonsense, but to throw a pebble for Comfi to retrieve.)

There is a spot on the lake, where narrows lead to one of the long arms of water, in which you can see fine handsome fish, any-would give her the empty tin — not quite Russet's line, fish — and she would lick it clean and pursue it for hours around the kitchen floor, picking it up and carrying it away when it eluded her under the furniture.)

One brilliant morning we steamed off for Sicamous, an hour's fast boatrike away, through lovely scenery. A pretty little place, I thought, but with its full share of mosquitoes! A wind came up, but Mira Lake was still and sheltered, with some beautiful homes whose lawns came down to the water's edge. Motor houseboats for rent were moored here, and we went through a few of these. Some were boxy and cramped, but others were spacious and well designed, with roofs as sun-decks, fenced and having bright chairs. One could be pretty comfortable on one of these, I thought, except for the feeling that a rental of close to $300 a week is a bit sticky!

Two weeks in another world go by all too quickly, and one must return to business, responsibilities, and the sense of loss.

There was, I found, another mourner for Comfi. The neighbors who own the acreage adjoining mine have a charming, small grey donkey. His name is Louie, and he and Comfi were fast friends. When he felt lonesome he came to the fence and stuck his head over and brayed, a ridiculous noise like a very large and very rusty gate, and Comfi would go running. Russet was never particularly interested, but Comfi adored horses, and she and Lonesome Louie stood, nose to nose, communing across the fence.

So I came home, and the first time I heard Louie's plaintive summons I went to the fence to explain the sad situation. He stood, head down, and, strangely, let me stroke his soft muzzle. Where, he wanted to know, was his little friend? Then it was that I saw, behind him, a tremendous pile of droppings which had never been there before. Over the two weeks I had been away he must have stood there for hours and hours, calling and waiting. And waiting. For someone who never came.

thing up to 18 inches long, cruising just below your boat. They are very snooty, I'm told, and seldom bite, so no one was doing any fishing at that point. However, at a spot where a creek enters the lake near to one of the camp's cabins, a visiting gentleman made a nice catch early one morning.

He was an Irishman, from Edmonton, vacationing with his two sons, and he and they paraded the beach proudly, carrying the fish like a baby, while one and all admired. Later, they lit their barbecue and roasted their prize for supper, and were kind enough to send along to our cabin a plate of fish. We all had some, and gave a mouthful each to the dogs.

Every Tuesday morning "the birders," a little coterie of local bird-watchers foregather at the foot of Bowker near the Willows Beach before setting off on their weekly spot and spy. Equipment for each is a measure of enthusiasm, a pair of binoculars and a copy of Roger Torrey Peterson, the birder's bible.

I know all this because my wife is one of them.

So far as I'm concerned, I can take 'em or leave 'em. The birds that is. For, on the home scene, slightly complicating the situation are the Clarks' Siamese cats. Two, to be exact . . . a male and a female.

"Don't let the cats out . . . it's the birds feeding time," is the oft-repeated and rather tiresome early morning injunction. As if they would bother. For these two Asiatics are probably the best fed cats in Canada. All you have to do is check with the well-known fish-vending firm of Miller and Askey.

Still this household myth goes on, despite the fact these sealpoints haven't caught a bird in years. Occasionally when the back lawn is loaded with bird life (they actually line up for turns at the bird baths), Puffy (that's the female of the team) will glare at them from the patio and make with chattering noises. A sort of feline raspberry. But no action.

Probably because she absorbed one brief lesson when she was less than a year old. The day I watched her chase after a robin on the lawn, and caught her look of amazement when it got airborne.

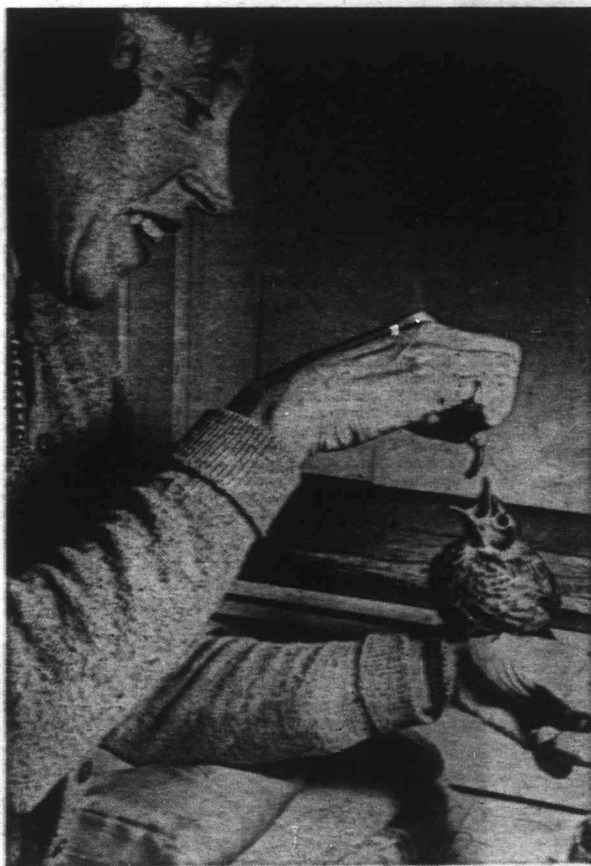

Stock still, she watched intently as it landed on a tree branch. "Gotcha!" she said (or something to that effect), then raced across the ground, scrambled up the tree and figuratively and literally found herself out on a limb. Though she was a mile out in her judgment, still she stared intently in the direction of the Sooke Hills wondering where it got to. Apparently the experience took effect for after that she couldn't care less. Her partner, on the other hand, in the lazy fashion of all male felines will settle for a chunk of fish any day in preference to a mouthful of feathers.

But back to the birdlovers who, in curious fashion, occasionally go to fly south through Europe on its omniscient workings of nature.

Take the case of Kenneth Tyson who lives in the little known community of Monifieth on the north side of the Firth of Tay in Scotland's east coast Forfarshire. It was there recently that Ken found an exhausted swallow in his house. So what does he do? He took it to the birdkeeper at the Dundee Zoo who gave it a meal. When it recovered keeper Alf Robinson, "knowing it would have no chance of survival if it were left to fly south through Europe on its own," took it in his car to the Edinburgh airport.

There, British European Airways flew it to the London airport, where it was transferred to a BOAC flight to Africa. Where, one concludes, it spent a sunshiny holiday. Now you know what this sort of performance is going to do to bird life? It's going to make them a bunch of free-loaders, that's what it's going to do.

STRICTLY for the BIRDS

That birdlovers spring from unexpected sources is evidenced by the recent case of Earl Savage, a salesman for the Nilson Glass Company, in Sarasota, Fla.

Earl, it seems discovered a tiny owl that had fallen 30 feet to the ground from its nest in a tree. So what does Earl do? He phones up the Florida Power and Light Company and gets a cherry picker and a crew to the scene, and they returned the fledgling to its nest. Which must have cost a pretty penny if anyone happened to be keeping score. But inescapable is the fact they were all birdlovers.

I had a first hand example of this tampering with nature a few years ago, and it involved a delightful couple on St. Patrick Street called Howard and Grace Bell. Matter of fact they still live there.

One afternoon when I dropped in on them for a casual visit, Howard suddenly remarked: "Let's go out into the garden and I'll introduce you to George." I figured for a moment that George might be the boy who did the weekly weeding.

When we got outdoors Howard started calling "George! Here George!" with a glance aloft at the neighboring trees. Then a robin came off a nearby roof and made a two-point landing on his shoulder.

"George," said Howard, "likes worms. We'll have to dig him some."

So with George still on his shoulder he picked up a fork and started digging in a vegetable patch. George by now (and I kid you not) had left his shoulder and was now perched on one of his hands. At the first sight of a worm it darted down to the ground.

"Does he come whenever you call him?" I asked.

"Certainly," said Howard.

After uncovering a dozen or so worms, we went indoors to a sunroom. George followed us in. Then for the next five minutes Howard fed him worms from the can.

It was about the craziest thing I'd ever seen.

But there was more. Grace told me that once, when she was due to depart for a tea fight at Cordova Bay, she found herself being followed to the car by George. When she took her seat behind the wheel, in fluttered George and accompanied her all the way to Cordova Bay. He remained in the car during the party, then returned with her to Oak Bay.

Not long after that, came an afternoon when neighboring Mrs. McArthur, hearing of these ornithological capers, decided to call at the Bells to see George for herself. As Grace and Mrs. Mac sat out on the lawn, for a few minutes George wasn't in evidence.

So they sipped and they talked. Then suddenly Grace remarked: "Why, there's George now. Here George." Like a dive bomber George made his sudden appearance, figuring in his usual friendly fashion to land on the edge of Mrs. McArthur's saucer. But alas, as can happen to the best of pilots, George misjudged the landing strip . . . and landed plunk in her cup of tea!

"Oh, poor George!" exclaimed Grace, jumping up and following George to a nearby flower bed where the robin was apparently trying to cool his hot feet.

When she returned with George on her hand, to make the proper introduction, Mrs. McArthur remarked, "Poor George, indeed. And here am I sitting with lapful of hot tea!" Altogether not one of George's most successful appearances.

What eventually happened to George history doesn't relate, but Grace still joins the "birders" every Tuesday morning. A nice friendly group, with perhaps one possible defence. I don't think they really like cats. Pity.

By S. C. W. STOKES

The subject is a Vancouver Island village.

Its ancient name was rooted here with a new post office in 1890.

It was served by a stage-coach for 20 years.

The provincial government operated an experimental farm here from the time of the First World War.

The village's war memorial to 15 young men is a poor substitute for their longer lives, but is, still, a fine, practical community hall.

It has a renowned 240-acre provincial park touching its southern border.

NEAR ERRINGTON . . . Nanaimo-Alberni stage approaches Englishman River bridge, from Craig's Corner, in early 1900s.

... of Erring Burns and Creeks

It hosted a pioneering amateur drama festival for 12 years.

It is a 13-square-mile area of the Island now inhabited by about 800 persons.

It has been and is, partly, every one of those who ever lived there.

It is Errington!

And any reader who doesn't know where Errington is hardly deserves to be called an Islander!

Soon to be published is a primer history booklet about the village.

The beginning of the community was in the great inland valley of the Englishman River and its winding tributary creeks, for centuries swamped by the waters held behind scores of beaver dams, which stretched across from hill to hillock in row behind row for a mile or so. Besides the thousands of beaver in and about those shallow lakes, there was a strong herd of elk browsing along on the sunny hillsides, many deer in the thickets, and ducks and geese winging the air.

Once Adam Horne had made his pioneer exploration over the rivers and mountains in that mid-Island area, and returned to his Hudson's Bay Company associates at Nanaimo with the accounts of all that he and his fellow travellers had seen, of native people, fur animals and game, and land and water, the trappers and hunters were not long in following his general path.

By the 1870s A. I. (Alec) Transfield was one who was working a trapline in that Englishman River valley which led west, and the first intending settlers were staking their 160-acre quarter sections of bench and delta lands around Nanoose Bay and the mouth of the river.

By the time the trappers had taken and moved on, another decade had gone, and the year was 1885 when the first two land-seeking men hiked or rode inland and started staking in the valley. Alva Swayne and Duncan McMillan claimed Lots 24 and 25, respectively, in the district. Lot No. 1 had been measured and staked 12 years earlier by John Hirst, on the coastal flats to the east of the river's mouth.

With a log and timber bridge then spanning the little gorge about two miles upstream, the Nanaimo city newspaper of April 22, 1885 noted:

ALBERNI MAIL. "The post office department invites tenders . . . for the conveyance of the mails from Nanaimo to Alberni via Nanoose, Englishman's River and Qualicum. Weekly trips to be made between 1st April and 30th November, and from 1st December to 31st March every alternate week. The service to be performed either on horseback or on foot at the option of the contractor. This will be a great boon to the settlers all the way from Nanaimo to Alberni, and will be sure to further encourage the location of more settlers between these places. It is good country and the action of the Dominion in providing mail communication and the provincial government opening up a short, easy and direct road will make this section the favorite resort of immigrants intending to locate and make a home for themselves and families."

The Nanaimo Free Press of May 13 (same year) proclaimed:

RETURN OF THE GOVERNMENT GUIDE. A PRACTICAL ROUTE FOUND. "Mr. W. Halpenny, the provincial government guide, and the lad McKenzie, arrived in this city on Monday morning, having made the trip via Cameron Lake from Alberni to Nanaimo. The man who took that first mail carrying contract with the Dominion Government in 1885 was Walter Watt, and he or associates maintained it for six years. The next three mailmen were G. A. Huff, from Oct. 1, 1891; T. Paterson, April 1, 1892; W. Armstrong, Sept. 1, 1893.

A Post Office known as French Creek was officially established on May 1, 1886, with Nelson Parks as postmaster. On Feb. 2, 1887, it was renamed to Parksville. (A second French Creek post office was established in the same general area on August 1, 1891, W. H. Lee, first master. It was closed on April 30, 1911.)

This little log building still stands, within what is now the Columbia Beach estate.

The Canadian postal service has recorded that Joseph A. McCarter was postmaster of Errington in December, 1890, conducting business at his father's Halfway House on the hill above Parksville, although he later set up the office at his own homestead some two miles west along the stage road.

An 1892 directory mentions Errington, Williams' 1893 B.C. Directory describes it: "Errington.

"In the Dominion electoral district of Vancouver and provincial of Nanaimo, on Vancouver Island, about 24 miles N.W. of Nanaimo. The nearest banking point, telegraph and express office, Nanaimo; it has one hotel, Jas. A. McCarter, prop.; communication by weekly steamer with Nanaimo, also stage to Nanaimo and Alberni. Principal industry of the place is farming; has a district school. Population, about 20."

Of the lyrical name chosen, it seems to have been selected from one of Walter Scott's poems, set to music as a ballad in a popular Scottish song book of the time. The Errington to which Scott refers is a small hamlet in the county of Northumberland, England, lying close to the line of the Roman Wall.

An extract from Hodgson's History of Northumberland reads, in part:

"In the N.E. corner of Cocklaw Township, about three-quarters of a mile from Watling Street and the same distance from the Erring Burn . . . is the homestead now known as Errington . . . formerly described as Errington Hall, and in Captain Armstrong's map of 1769 called a Castle. It is now a substantial, stone-built house facing south . . . From this, their ancient home, the family of Errington took their name."

" . . . Robert de Errington and Ralph de Errington occur about 1228, and the record has been preserved of a sale by Robert de Errington to Archbishop Gray in consideration of $20 in silver."

"William Errington was High Sheriff of Northumberland in 1371."

" . . . The four men who appeared at the muster of 1538 all bore the name of Errington, and about the same period, Gilbert Errington and five men of Errington were appointed to go, if called upon, to Berwick 'in tyme of necessity."

" . . . Gilbert Errington held lands . . . by copy of Court Rolls, paying yearly £7.5.8 and 21 years later the heirs of Nicholas Errington held Cocklaw, Errington, Fallowfield, Keepwick, Wharmley Hall, Stonecroft, etc."

"Many pieces of evidence seem to show that the family of Errington was not only one of the oldest but also one of the most important in Hexhamshire. Their association with the Lords of the regality and with the prior of Hexham has already been noticed . . ."

And so on . . .

Vancouver Island, 1893.
The Jan. 4 edition of the Nanaimo Free Press contained a small advertisement to the effect that the Alberni Mail Stage left Nanaimo at 1 p.m. on Fridays and returned on Wednesdays. It was signed by T. Paterson.

By Sept. 4 the same year, the same advertisement was running each week over the name B. Tubman.

The Enterprise newspaper of the busy coal-mining town of Wellington announced on its front page of October 11, 1895:

"A NEW STAGE LINE. BETWEEN HERE AND ALBERNI IS NOW A REALITY. For some time past a prominent citizen here has been using every endeavor to organize a stage line between here and Alberni. His efforts have been crowned with success . . . The first run is from Wellington to Englishman's River, where fresh horses are taken on. This relay carries the stage to Cameron NATURAL HAY MEADOW at Swayne Farm, Errington, in early 1900s.

Lake, where another change is made which takes them into Alberni . . . The owners are seriously contemplating the erection of a large hotel at Cameron Lake . . . Sareault's hotel is the Alberni headquarters of the new stage line."

In a small separate advertisement William Armstrong, proprietor, stated that: "The Alberni mail stage leaves Nanaimo every Tuesday and Friday upon the arrival of the noon train from Victoria. Commencing on the 21st October, fare for round trip $5, single fare $3. Valises and small business. An overnight stage was taken at his personal effects carried free. Freight 1c per lb."

By 1897, Joe McCarter was operating the stage place, on the outward journey, but the return run from Alberni to Nanaimo (60 to 70 dusty or muddy miles) was made in one 11-hour day.

The yearly influx of settlers continued steadily and in the next few years was to increase rapidly. Socially disturbed conditions in their homelands across the seas forced more and more people to decide that emigration to this country, that was raw, remote but roomy, was in the best interests of all.

About 1900, a company formed by two speculative men purchased much local land from the Esquimalt and Nanaimo Railway Company.

In the words of the late Alfred Carmichael, of Victoria:

"The Vancouver Island Fruit lands Ltd. originated with Carmichael and Moorhead Ltd. On consulting the E. and N. lands maps, we found there were extensive areas in the Alberni, Nanaimo and Newcastle Districts available for settlement.

"My cousin, Herbert Carmichael, provincial assayer and assistant mineralogist, was a friend of Robert Marpole, executive assistant to the president of the CPR in the west. He introduced me to Mr. Marpole. I personally negotiated the terms of an agreement by which Carmichael and Moorhead Ltd. took under option 32,212 acres of land."

"The price was five dollars per acre . . ."

"Our plan was to examine the land, classify it, open it up with roads, subdivide into farms of approximately 40 acres and sell at a price of approximately $40 per acre. At this time there was a strong movement of settlers into British Columbia, not only from the prairie provinces and eastern Canada but also from the British Isles . . ."

"We contacted a Mr. Barbey who headed a syndicate of French investors planning to invest some eight million dollars in Canada. Mr. Barbey was keenly interested and took an option on all the lands we had under option from the E. and N. Railway Company and . . . in 1911 we closed the sale of our option to him at a price of eight dollars per acre. In addition to our land, Mr. Barbey purchased the residential subdivision: The Uplands, in Victoria, and approximately 2,000 acres of waterfront on Sooke Harbor."

"The V.I.F.L. Ltd. was organized. An office

Two days of beach walking on southwest Denman Island proved to be an effective way to shoot down two months of armchair reading and theorizing on the geology of South Denman Island.

The island is best known in literature for its upper cretaceous (70 million year old) rocks and fossilized shells of extinct ammonites found there. Yet it is a fact (at least in this one case), the fossils are not even secondary (interest-wise) as to what can be found there for the rockhunters and geology enthusiasts who comb the beaches.

Arriving an hour before dark at Mountain View Resort, after a 15-minute ferry ride from Vancouver Island, a quick 10-minute dash onto the flat beach produced a few unidentifiable fossil shell fragments.

"No worry," it was observed smugly, "tomorrow better specimens will be found." Two days later, sailing away, no fossils at all had been found (except a bit of coal). As it turned out, samples from other fields of geology — not found on the lower mainland or close to Victoria — were so numerous it didn't matter at all.

Beach Walking on Denman

The first find of genuine interest was some sandstone caves at the base of a ridge of rocks running across a small meadow. This field was once covered by tides at some time in the past, with the wave action creating the caves.

The largest cave, entered from the side, contained an outer chamber with a high narrow uneven passage that can be squeezed through (light enters from some cracks in this passage). Further beyond was a largish smooth walled chamber that went off around the corner and disappeared. Whether it goes any farther has yet to be found out.

Although the island is remarkably free of bothersome insects, it does have numerous harmless snakes. Let the ophidiophobe beware.

Most of the exploration was confined to the beach, and two of the most interesting things the cretaceous rocks have to offer have been unfairly glossed over in the past.

One is — or are — the great number of clastic dykes. These are long narrow vertical strips of sandstone cutting across the flat shale beach, usually at right angles to the bedding planes of the shale.

Found throughout the area given on the map, they are particularly abundant around Repulse Point, occurring in swarms and singly. Some of these curious strips are more than several hundred yards in length, and run in all directions of the compass, even cutting across each other.

In other parts of the world, sandstone dykes have been found several miles long.

The formation of these dykes is believed to be the filling in of cracks and fissures — with sand in this case — which would make them somewhat younger than the shales they are imbedded in.

Another — and possibly the most interesting for some — are the many concretions.

These are balls, a foot or more in diameter, of a more resistant claystone that has weathered free from the softer enclosing parent rock. These cover the beach by the dozens — even hundreds.

These form around a nucleus, often containing a fossil or some other material.

Another form of concretion is the septarian boulder; where the interior is filled with radiating cracks. These cracks, believed to have formed from shrinkage (there are other water. Add lemon and ice cubes until thickened, about 3 minutes. Stir in remaining ingredients. Unmould on salad greens. Decorate and orange sections with mayonnaise seasoned with a dash of desired. Makes 4 entrees in corn chowder and hot rolls.

In summer evening what could be more refreshing than a Moulded Tuna and Cucumber salad can be prepared early in the day and kept chilled in the refrigerator for serving at any convenient time.

TUNA AND CUCUMBER SALAD ... 1 package vegetable flavor gelatine mix, 1 cup boiling water, 1/2 cup cold water, 1/2 cup cold lemon juice, 1/2 cup mayonnaise, 1 can (7 oz.) tuna, drained and finely diced, unpeeled cucumber, 1/2 cup celery hearts and 1/2 cup sliced. Dissolve gelatine mix and salt in water, blend in cold water, lemon juice, and onion. Chill until slightly thickened. Stir in remaining ingredients. Spoon into moulds. Chill until firm. Unmould.

Serve with crisp greens and mayonnaise. Serves 4.

MOULDED SEA FOOD SALAD ... 1 pkg. (3 oz.) tomato aspic flavor gelatine mix, 1 cup boiling water, 1/2 cup cold water and 1/2 cups diced cooked shrimp or flaked crab meat. Dissolve gelatine in boiling water, add cold water and chill until slightly thickened. Fold in shrimp or crab meat, pour into a 1-quart mould or individual moulds. Chill until firm. Unmould on crisp greens and garnish with parsley. Pass the mayonnaise.

Now here is a moulded salad that is a little different. It combines cream cheese, shredded carrot and apple.

CARROT RELISH MOULD ... 1 (3 oz.) package vegetable flavor gelatine mix, 1 cup boiling water, 1 package (4 oz.) cream cheese softened, 1/2 cup mayonnaise, 1/2 cup orange juice, 1/2 tsp. grated lemon peel, 2 Tbsp. lemon juice, 1 cup shredded carrot and 1 cup chopped unpared red apple. Dissolve gelatine in boiling water. Add soft cream cheese and beat smooth with an electric or rotary beater. Stir in orange juice, mayonnaise, lemon peel and lemon juice. Chill until partially set. Stir in carrot and apple. Spoon into mould. Chill until firm. Unmould and garnish with carrot curls and orange sections. As an alternative to the chopped apple I sometimes use drained Mandarin orange sections from a 14-oz. can. The juice can be used as part of the liquid called for. This is a nice salad. It is nice with cold cuts especially when you use apple or orange, this is a delishious with cold roast pork.

And now for some desserts ... what could be nicer than the fruits from B.C.

BRIDE'S CORNER

Besides the new savory gelatine now available there is of course a whole family of fruit gelatines ... 15 fruity flavors. Besides moulding them into desserts they can be used in a number of other ways ... sprinkle the sweet, colored crystals right from the box onto breakfast cereal, on grapefruit, on hot buttered toast, on ice cream, on fruit, on cup cakes before baking for color and flavor. Do your own thing and invent your own exciting ways to use these colorful crystals.

A basket of fruit or vegetables makes a fine impromptu table centre. The fruit of course can always double as a dessert which eliminates a lot of preparation.

Hors d'oeuvres for nibbles can be impaled with bright toothpicks on a cabbage, an eggplant, a red apple, half a melon or grapefruit (cut side down on plate).

orchards? How blessed we are with an abundance and a variety of fruit grown here in our own beautiful British Columbia ... peaches, plums, melons, pears, grapes and apples. What could be nicer after a hearty meal than a medley of fruit marinated in a little sweet sherry and chilled for an hour before serving. Melons are at their peak and if you are looking for an easy but dramatic finale to a meal how about wedges of gorgeous pink watermelon on a turquoise pottery plate?

Cantaloupe too is a delicious way to finish off a meal, but remember ... never ice a cantaloupe. Served at room temperature they are at their mellow best. Try a melon ball cocktail and pour over it a citrus-scented syrup ... in a small saucepan combine 1 tsp. grated lemon rind, 2 tsp. grated orange peel, 2 Tbsp. lemon juice, 2-3 cup orange juice and 1-3 cup sugar. Bring to a boil, add a dash salt and stir until sugar is dissolved. Reduce heat and simmer 5 minutes. Chill syrup till icy. Scoop out 3 cups honeydew melon balls. Divide into 6 glasses. Add syrup and garnish with a mint leaf.

Plums are a marvelous fruit ... we eat them out of hand, make jam, plum pie, plum-chutney, use them in salads and goodness knows how many other ways. A plum upside down cake is really elegant. We serve it upside down and warm.

When you haul your outboard motor in your car, lay it on a partially inflated inner tube.

This really saves and protects the motor and eliminates the rattle and noise when going over rough roads.

LET'S FACE IT

DEAR HELOISE:

My daughter and I came up with a cute idea that's a knee and money saver.

She has three little boys who crawl the knees out of their pants. We cut faces — doll, clown, animal — from the different-colored iron-on patches and used liquid embroidery paints to paint on eyes, mouths, etc.

Then we used the machine to zig-zag around the edges to make them stay on much longer through wash after wash.

Her little boys are so impressed they even want to wear them to church.

HAPPY BIRTHDAY!

DEAR HELOISE:

For my son's birthday party I gathered all the gallon bleach bottles I could find — one for each child invited.

I washed them and cut the bottom half off the bottle (underneath the handle), scalloped the edges and used that part for the hats.

Then I made pompons for the center top of the hat out of yarn and put matching yarn ties that could be tied underneath the chin. Then I wrote each child's name on a hat. Presto! Real cute party hats that cost me practically nothing.

The children were greatly pleased with these and wore them all during the party without ever taking them off.

A HOT IDEA

DEAR HELOISE:

When making homemade cinnamon rolls (or other rolls of this type), I always had trouble with my filling oozing out when slicing with a knife.

Now, when I get ready to slice it for baking I take an 8" length of heavy thread, place it under the roll where I want to cut, bring the ends together on top and cross them, then pull. This cuts beautifully and sort of seals the filling in without mashing it all out of shape.

It works perfectly for me every time.

SCRAMBLED EGGS?

DEAR HELOISE:

Recently I dropped four eggs while taking them from the refrigerator. They dropped on the floor and you know what a mess that causes.

I took a dust pan and a spatula and scooped it up on that. They washed the dust pan and the floor.

THE TIME FLEW!

DEAR HELOISE:

You might like to know how I solved staying alone when I was so sick with the flu.

I had my husband put a thermos of cold juice, another of water, my medicine, and an alarm clock on a TV table beside the bed. Then I was all set for the eight hours my husband had to be gone to work since I couldn't eat anything anyway. I could take my medicine, reset the alarm and go back to sleep.

YUMMY SALAD

DEAR HELOISE:

The other day when making a cabbage, pineapple and banana salad I discovered I didn't have any marshmallows — and my recipe calls for them.

My son doesn't like them so it dawned on me, why not add marshmallow creme, same flavor but no marshmallows. I added it to the dressing. It was delicious and my son absolutely loved it.

Whatever happened to the ritual of afternoon tea? Not just a hurried cup of tea (made with those awful bags), but a leisurely tea, brewed with loving care, heated cups, tea strainer, and dish for the used leaves—I think it's called—horrors—a slop bowl. What a dreadful name for a beautiful piece of china or silver!

Whatever Happened to Afternoon Tea

Yes, tea, not with a half-toasted, soggy bun hurried at you across a counter, but tea with watercress and cucumber sandwiches, hot scones, Devonshire cream and strawberry jam, chocolate cake with thick icing! Gone forever, no doubt, in this age of dieting and rush, rush, rush.

Victoria was famous for its tea rooms—the Zetland, the Tea Kettle, Clays, the Cozy Corner, Spencer's, and all the hotel dining rooms, where tea was regular meal—at 4 p.m., not a moment before. None of this 3 p.m. tea, so popular today.

It's so vulgar at that hour. It must have something to do with the modern uneconomic curse of what's called the coffee break.

The illustrations on this page are from The Week, 1908-12, a smart local weekly publication, with punchy editorials and all the choicest bits about what Victoria's high society was up to. Emily Carr once did political cartoons for

The Week. The editor likely threw the originals into the trash bucket. Little did he know the fortune they'd be worth today.

The Westholme Hotel, now the Century Inn, went up in this period of boom—among its builders being James Surlis of Virginia, brother of Mrs. James Dunsmuir; Henry Kaiser, later to achieve fame in U.S. shipbuilding and hotels; Sol Cameron and Jack O'Brien, Americans all.

It was a fancy place with large tiled bathrooms, its night-club programs and dining room quite as classy as Seattle, from where the entertainers usually came.

It was expensive—75 cents for roast turkey, ribs of beef, chicken Maryland, sweetbreads in chafing dish—and vegetables were extra—35 cents for fresh asparagus, 15 cents for new potatoes, 10 cents for fresh spinach.

Deserts included strawberries and cream, 35 cents; peach melba, 25 cents.

On the Dallas Road, just west of St. Lawrence Street, away from the hustle and bustle of downtown Victoria was the Dallas Hotel.

Perhaps the Dallas' most distinguished guest was Lady Macdonald, widow of Canada's first Prime Minister, Sir John A. Macdonald.

She stayed several weeks in the 1890s, enjoying the quiet and the views of sea and mountains, walks along the beach and carriage drives through nearby Beacon Hill Park.

Besides—the Dallas was but a block away from Armadale, the castle-like residence of Lady Macdonald's good friends, Senator and Mrs. W. J. Macdonald.

The Dallas was a Victoria institution. If you were California-bound you went to the Dallas in the evening, and there, asleep, you waited for your steamer to blow her whistle, and then the night porter awakened you, and you rushed across the road to the docks to sail for San Francisco.

Otherwise you'd camp on the wharf most of the night, for it was never known for sure when the outbound vessel would arrive here from Seattle, there being no wireless.

The Alexandra Club came into being at this time, "mothered" by Mrs. James Dunsmuir, Mrs. Andrew Wright, Mrs. R. P. Rithet, and other leading Victoria hostesses.

Women, in those days, were not permitted not so much as a step inside the Union Club, except for the annual ball, a most fashionable affair. The Alexandra Club (named for the Queen of King Edward VII) was on Courtney Street, north side, just east of Douglas. It had a fine ballroom, all mirrors and crystal chandeliers.

The dining room, which started with a flourish, soon was lacking customers, the ladies deciding they preferred home luncheons.

Perhaps their husbands had something to do with this; certain gentlemen, at the Union Club, looked upon the Alexandra Club as nothing but a

And so it came about that the Alexandra Club dining room had to be turned into a public cafe in order to keep the wolf from the door — but that didn't last long either. Gentlemen felt conspicuous dining in a ladies' club.
How times have changed — ladies have today pretty well taken over the Union Club, and they don't feel conspicuous in the least. Why are women bolder than men?
The old Alexandra Club has been the Windermere Hotel, and RCMP headquarters, and now houses provincial government offices. One wonders how long it will be before there's a high rise on this choice site.
The Driad (the View-Broad corner of Eatons) was Victoria's finest hotel — almost as splendid as the Palace in San Francisco.
Emily Carr's impression of it was that it was all red plush and palm trees; the red plush, she wrote, soaking up all the Driad smells and even going along in the Driad free bus to meet the steamers and trains.
Several local hotels had these free buses. The last is believed to have been that of the Dominion.
A man in livery stood on the back step calling out: "Dom-in-ee-on Hotel—a-free bus—the Dom-in-ee-on, the best in the west — step aboard ladies and gentlemen — just a few blocks — the Dom-in-ee-on."
The Driad dining room was the last word in elegance, and many a 7 p.m.-2 a.m. banquet was held there — gentlemen only — with speeches, songs and frequent toasts. Such stamina as our forefathers showed!
The table had white damask clothes and serviettes — none of this paper stuff that's always flying about, causing male diners to use their handkerchiefs, and then leaving them behind, subsequently enduring a wifely lecture for carelessness.
The Week gave every detail of ensembles worn by society ladies at elegant parties.

Sunday, August 22,

There's a man in Victoria who has one of the most interesting hobbies to be found around here. He is Herbert Jackson, and his hobby is that of collecting walking sticks—or canes, as they are often called.

JACKSON'S WALKING STICK

Herbert Jackson was born in Ontario, about 60 miles from Ottawa. He comes of farming stock and when he was small his family moved first to Manitoba and thence to Saskatchewan. He, himself, took up farming in the latter province and it was there that he married and lived for many years until he and his wife retired and moved to Victoria to live in 1953.

In 1905, Herbert's father-in-law in Manitoba came across a very oddly-shaped poplar tree. Ivy had grown around some of the smaller branches and as the branches grew, the strength of the ivy cut into the wood and the restricted growth caused the wood to bulge in clockwise swirls around the branch. Herbert's father-in-law was so interested in the peculiar shape of the wood that he cut a bit of that branch — sufficient to make a walking stick.

Later still, the odd-shaped walking stick came into Herbert's hands and formed the basis of what was to become an absorbing hobby.

When the cane became Herbert Jackson's, it was still an unfinished twisted bit of wood. However, he got busy with it and first removed the bark, after which he polished and stained the stem and later selected a suitable hooked piece of wood from his Saskatchewan farm which he cut and polished to form the handle of his cane. To hold the handle in place, he first drilled holes in the top of the stick and the bottom of the handle, and then, with glue and a screw bolt he joined the two pieces together.

That first walking stick gave Herbert so much pleasure and was such a talking-piece around the neighborhood, that he really began to take a keen interest in his hobby. In his work around the farm, he kept his eye peeled for likely pieces and, of course, since he was living in Saskatchewan, it was not long before the diamond willow caught his eye.

This diamond willow, I am told, is widely used on the prairies since it makes excellent material for fence-posts. The reason for this is that it is very strong and will outlast most fence-posts made of other woods. Also, it is plentiful. It is not surprising, therefore, that Herbert's second attempt at making a walking stick should have, as its wood, the diamond willow. The peculiar shaping of this particular wood when peeled and polished makes for a cane as rare and unusual as that of the earlier twisted poplar.

The walking stick is variously described as a cane, wand, stock or rod for use in walking. Oddly enough, it is of great antiquity, and it would appear that probably the first type of walking stick might have been the long shepherd's crook known in biblical times. This certainly did serve as a staff as well as a tool for hooking errant lambs. In some parts of Northern England and Scotland one may still see these crooks in use as, no doubt, they are in other parts of the world as well.

Walking travellers in olden days long been noted for their liking for walking sticks. In fact, it is something of a joke. At the Oak Bay Tea Party, there is always bound to be one character with an overly long woollen scarf and a good stout walking stick as a sign of the Englishness of it all.

Perhaps the height of the walking stick craze, however, came in with the days of the famous Beau Brummell, an Englishman who was born in 1778, and who was to become so fashion-conscious that his word as to what a gentleman should wear or carry became almost law for more than 100 years.

By MARGARET S. BELFORD were nearly always depicted as having a long heavy stick to help them along their way. In Buckinghamshire, England, farmers had another long-handled implement which served them as a walking stick on their farming rounds. This was known variously as a paddle or a spuddock. It was as long as a crook but had the business part at the other end. This was something like a very miniature Dutch hoe, and, of course, was serviceable in that the farmer could root out any pesky weeds on his round of sheep and cattle counting.

English men and women have

From approximately 1760 until nearly the end of the nineteenth century, it was almost obligatory for any man of fashion to carry a long thin cane — very often with a leather strap attached in a loop to the upper part since these canes had no handles and were, indeed, too long to have made such a thing of any use. Oddly enough, whilst English women felt French fashions were the height of elegance, Frenchmen in their turn, were most ardent copiers of English male fashion.

To this end, even the Frenchmen copied Beau Brummell, the greatest dandy of them all, and the French writer Honore de Balzac, was one of these who aspired to be a dandy in the English style. It is reported that when he arrived in Paris in 1830 he "professed to possess a different waistcoat for every day of the year, and as many pairs of gloves." Perhaps his outstanding feature, however, was his "enormous walking stick which had a head studded with jewels."

Another odd fact, though, is that during the seventeenth century, gentlemen wearing swords were quite often to be found carrying tassled canes as well. These must have been a bit hampering if they had to draw their sword in a hurry! This, in all probability, may have heralded the advent of the sword-stick — that innocent-seeming cane which could become a dangerous rapier at the drop of a hat.

A sword-stick is one of the items missing from Herbert Jackson's collection though, as a collector, he keeps his weather eye open for such a thing. One never knows, he might just be lucky enough one of these days to find such a thing.

Whilst the majority of Herbert's walking canes are of his own making, he does have a number which he has either been given or has picked up in secondhand stores in town. One of these is a very beautiful bamboo cane which came from the East and is beautifully carved all the way up the stem with delicate Chinese ladies.

Other items among his bought or given canes include an old Irish blackthorn which is very knobby and is reputed to be over 300 years old. He also has two of rosewood briar — one very thin and a delicate one which looks as if it may once have belonged to a lady. One of his favorite pieces, however, is a heavy ivory-colored and handleless cane. At first, he had a hard time trying to discover just what it was composed of, but finally ascertained that it was made from an elephant's tusk. Also that the tusk came from an Indian elephant rather than that of an African, since the Indian elephants are considerably larger and have much longer tusks than their African brothers.

Herbert Jackson dates the real beginning of his strange hobby around the year 1953 when, on retirement, he had the time and leisure to pursue it. However, even in his farming days he found time to keep a weather eye open for likely canes. Two of his most interesting canes are made of spruce, cut whilst he was in Saskatchewan. In a spruce tree, he tells me, one will always find that six young branches will grow in a circle about the main stem. These offshoot circles appear at a regular distance of approximately one foot apart.

The great trick with canes made of spruce is to get them while still young and green. If cut at that time, it is a fairly simple matter to train the sets of smaller branches so that they form large whorls and finally encircle the cane where they are fastened into position.

Sometimes fir wood may be used for this type of cane, and Herbert recalls that he made one very satisfactory looped cane from a fir found on Oldfield Road.

is type of cane, and Herbert acts that he made one very ictory looped cane from a fir on Oldfield Road.

Apple wood makes for a very good cane, and one of his most attractive items, he tells me, came from an old apple tree across from the curling rink. Even in his own present garden he sometimes finds suitable wood upon which to work.
Such a piece he took from a peach tree on his property. This was no cane, but for all the world, it did resemble an Irish shillelagh with a head or business end shaped like a face. He has another and authentic shillelagh made of blackthorn. This, in fact, actually belongs to his wife for it was her father's and was brought over to Canada in 1914.

In Oak Bay, Herbert Jackson found on an old fence a piece of wood which, by pressure of heaps of stones about the stem, had been bent into a complete looped head which, of course, was ideal for a handle.

Fir, Herbert thinks, makes for a finer cane than some other woods.
When he first came to the Island to live, he worked for a while up near Butler's gravel pit. While there, he found a number of canes suitable for walking sticks and which he brought home to work on in his leisure time.

Others among his collection include a cork elm cut in Cordova Bay. This he left unpeeled, but he found that it polished up beautifully.

The head for this, he made of firwood taken from a branch which had been blown down by a storm.
Another of his canes came from Prospect Lake and what is more, it was bent in such a way that it already had its own fitted handle.

In all, Herbert Jackson has a collection of some 40 canes. He has a leather-covered officer's swagger stick, and another cane he made from an amazingly strong and straight piece of ivy stem. Barked and polished, it became a thing of beauty. But not all his canes are of wood. Six or seven years ago he made a lady's cane from the steel shaft of a golf club. While another cane came into being with the help of a billiard cue.

"It's funny how a thing gets a he of one," Herbert says, with a smile. "Some folks might think it's an odd sort of hobby to have. But I like it. I enjoy looking for possible bits of wood, and browsing around the secondhand stores. I've met a lot of interesting people because of it and — you never know — maybe one of these days, I'll come across that sword-stick."

Maybe he will. But whether or not, Herbert Jackson still has one of the most fascinating collections around town. One certain way of causing a stir would be to take a walk down Douglas Street with one of his diamond willow canes. That would make the passersby sit up and take notice, for sure!

BROADSIDES FIRED RIGHT and LEFT

The Daily British Colonist was only entering its teen-age years in that late summer of the confederation year, 1871, but it had had from the beginning a stentorian voice and was a formidable political factor. Governors and governments were its most popular targets, but from time to time the editors shook their fists and raised their voices against a variety of injustices and shortcomings at home and abroad.

Where the colonial authorities in London had previously been the popular whipping-boys of David W. Higgins, currently the editor and propi-etor, now that British Columbia's status had changed with confederation there were all sorts of new abuses which roused this man to anger.

The iniquitous California head tax against British Columbians was one of them. For the California Steamships office in Victoria had been collecting $5 from every non-U.S. citizens taking passage to San Francisco. The fare was $30. Colonists and other foreigners paid $35.

"This exorbitant tax, it is said, goes into the coffers of the state of California, being a local head tax for all foreigners arriving at any port in the state," The Colonist complained.

"Just as the officers of the same state levied a poll tax of $50 on Chinamen arriving there," Higgins added.

Congress, it seemed, had put an end to that particular practice, apparently establishing that "the imposition of a special tax upon the citizens of foreign governments by any state of the Union is unconstitutional."

Higgins mentioned, too, that at one time the greedy Californians had actually imposed a $6.50 head tax on everyone leaving the state.
An angry traveller had finally tested the matter in the courts 10 years before, and the tax was ruled unconstitutional.

The injustice of the $5 head tax on travellers out of Victoria was the more flagrant since it was in contravention of the terms of treaty which allowed free passage of Canadians and Americans across one another's borders, Higgins contended.
And he added that unless there was immediate abrogation of this California levy the government of British Columbia should retaliate.

While he was castigating California, Higgins had some hard words for apathetic British Columbians who, with elections nearing, were reluctant to offer themselves as candidates. There were plenty of office-seekers, but they were not the sort Higgins thought desirable.

What he really wanted was some good, strong protectionists to come forward, and he eventually got around to suggesting it.

"... We want men who know well the requirements and interests of the country," not men who only want office as a stepping-stone to power.

"There are men who, at the present time, should throw aside their apathy and indifference, and give the new province, now in helpless infancy, a fair start to political progress, and not allow the government to fall into the hands of those who, lacking wisdom, experience or honesty, may recklessly bring it into complications and disrepute."

There were grave issues at stake, Higgins reminded his readers, "and none more so than the tariff."

Canada's tariff structure was most suitable "and no man should be supported either for the local House or the Dominion Commons who will not support (its) immediate adoption" for British Columbia.

And then Higgins had a warning:
"If proper men be returned there will be little or no difficulty in so shaping the destinies of the country that responsible government will prove a blessing to all. But if good men decline to come forward the government of the country will soon fall into the hands of knaves, and the new constitution prove an unmitigated curse."

The Colonist political battle line was drawn.

"For a number of years I have been investigating the possible relation between the religion of the Stone Age and water divining. Both are unsolved mysteries."

So begins The Pattern of the Past, an absorbing and unconventional book that you are unlikely to see in Victoria unless you order it.

The late Reginald Allender Smith, of the British Museum, was the first to suggest a possible connection between the location of ancient monuments and the presence of underground water.

Smith, an authority on the Stone Age, knew better than to divulge his heresy to fellow scientists — nothing infuriates a little learning so much as greater knowledge — so he confined it to a small body of water diviners — the British Society of Dowers.

The belief eventually came to the attention of Guy Underwood who was so intrigued that he taught himself to dowse (dowsers are super water diviners) and set off on a lone quest to widen the horizon of knowledge. The Pattern of the Past details his findings.

After years and years of investigation, Underwood has found evidence to suggest that the location of prehistoric monuments — also the size, shape and all details appertaining to them — were dictated by underground water courses.

Although Underwood successfully tested his theory in ancient cathedrals and at widely scattered mysterious monuments all over England, he concentrated on Stonehenge, the greatest and most complex of all prehistoric monuments.

Why, Underwood asked himself, was Stonehenge sited where it is and not miles away, preferably convenient to the source of the stone of which it is fashioned? His theory, thoroughly tested, is that the Druids sited their religious monuments by water divining, knowing they could always be rediscovered by this means.

The exact centre of Stonehenge is sited above a "blind spring" which feeds a radiating pattern of underground streams. Underwood found the same thing, without exception, at the approximate centre of every ancient monument Reginald Smith had mentioned.

Working mostly alone, Underwood researched, prospected, surveyed and dug. The evidence of geodetic lines forming what he calls the geodetic system is presented simply and convincingly in this intriguing book.

This challenging thesis provides a rare insight into the minds and skills of prehistoric man, but it is doubtful whether scientists will pay any attention.

Physicists don't understand water divining; their instruments don't respond to any dowsing influence; therefore it doesn't exist! And archaeologists are more concerned with the artifacts of early man than with his behavior. They know what he did and what he built, but they don't know why, or in what he believed.

Who is Guy Underwood? No one in particular. And what, scientists would ask, are his qualifications? In the accepted sense, none. But what does that matter?

In 1920, Eliot Howard, an English bird-watcher, published a book called Territory in Bird-life in which he quietly stated that male birds concentrate on establishing territory, that they seldom quarreled over females, only over real estate.

That statement by an amateur, which has since been found to apply to most species, gave birth to the science of ethology, the study of animal behaviorism in the wild.

And don't forget Gregor Johann Mendel, an obscure Austrian monk whose interest in botany led him to experiment with the scientific cultivation of common garden peas in the monastery garden. In 1866 he published his famous thesis on the law of heredity.

No one paid any attention to Mendel's Law until 1900, but from the monk's hypothesis stemmed the science of genetics.

One day, perhaps, Underwood's Law will be accepted as the explanation for the siting of ancient monuments, and for the reason for the twisting lanes of England and Europe which follow paths originally made by animals instinctively following the water courses that constitute the earth force.

IN AND OUT OF LOVE, poems and images arranged by Bruce Vance; Van Nostrand Reinhold; 118 pages; $2.50.

Bruce Vance has collected some marvellous poems and pictures in these two books, Being Born and Growing Older and In and Out of Love. Every type of poem has been represented; lyrical poems; narrative poems; serious poems; funny poems.

Many different poets have been presented here also; Shakespeare, Lord Byron, Robert Frost, E. E. Cummings; the list is endless. The style is also varied, ranging from long ballads to "shape poetry."

All of the poems in these two books have been arranged according to the different themes the books are divided into. The full meaning of the poems has been further brought out by pictures that illustrate them.

Anyone who is interested in poetry should read these two books. The selection of different poems will also provide a good beginning for anyone who is just starting to read poetry. The poems are so varied that you are sure to find some you will enjoy. —CINDY JAGGAED

REVIEW IN BRIEF

SECOND IMAGE, by Ronald Sutherland; New Press; 250 pages; $7.50.

TALES FROM THE MARGIN, Selected Stories of Frederick Philip Grove; Ryerson, McGraw-Hill, Canada; 319 pages; $8.95.

Second Image is a collection of Quebec-Canadian literature, by Professor Ronald Sutherland, who inaugurated the first degree course in this subject, at the University of Sherbrooke.

Canadian literature has always been kept in distinct compartments labelled French-Canadian and English-Canadian. Sutherland, in unlocking these compartments, shows that writers in both parts of Canada have been molded by the same environment and are in fact engaged in converging searches for truth.

As writers and artists traditionally lead the way, this most interesting book is infinitely more rewarding than all the claptrap published by half-baked political scientists.

English-speaking Canadians smugly think that whilst they are evolving Quebecers are standing still, except on the political front. Nothing could be farther from the fact.

Sutherland stresses the point that, in literature, Quebec's revolution consists of a questioning of old values — the domination by church and family, and that the end result could well be the emergence of a new Quebec man, an example to the rest of Canada.

From this would evolve a young generation of writers with identical values who would produce the elusive Canadian identity.

The essays in Second Image are essentially literary in character, but the wider implications of the subject make Sutherland's book a watershed in Canada's evolution.

MANNERS TO LOVE BY, by Robert H. Leach, Jr. (G. E. Welch); 128 pages; $5.50. This is a manual for young couples, purportedly designed to keep their marriage off the rocks.

Leach, using the jargon of the pseudo-psychologist, touches on subjects most young couples have never heard of. In warning them of the problems they didn't know they had, he is virtually counselling them to put their respective partners under the microscope and look for trouble.

Despite the high divorce rate, most couples weather the matrimonial storms and emerge wiser and stronger. But those unfortunate enough to read a seemingly innocuous book like Manners to Love By are liable to be capsize by the first big wave and be washed up on some dangerous, shoal-ridden-psychiatric shore. —E.D.W.H.

A CONTINUAL INTEREST IN THE SUN AND THE SEA, by Keith Gunderson (Intext — Abelard-Schuman; paperback, $4.50) is a slim volume of poems by a young American professor of philosophy who has an affinity for the seashore, a joyous attitude towards his children, and an affection for life — rare attributes indeed in these glum days.

Gunderson's highly infectious bubbling gaiety is expressed in free-line verse with the abandon of a man supremely sure of himself. He touches on false values (the greed culture; killer-sportsmen) and, delicately, adult games on the beach, but the bulk of his work is concerned with his joy in nature.

He's not afraid to be whimsical (three vertical "o's" over the word "fish" represent bubbles; brackets represent whales) but even when he's being funny (presumably to amuse his children) visual effect takes second place to sound observation and intense feeling.

This is a gay and delightful collection of verses.

The very opposite of gay and delightful are the verses of E. Curmale Price in THE STATE OF THE UNION (Some Nis Press; 70 pages; $5). His verses are filled with venom and cynicism.

Price is a professional Black preaching to the converted. Here's a sample:

PLANTS ARE LIKE PEOPLE, by Jerry Baker (Copp Clark; 96 pages; $8.95) is a book that can safely be overlooked by the sophisticated gardeners of Victoria. Unindexed, and full of whimsical writing, the book is aimed at the status-conscious very amateur gardeners of suburban America.

Although there is a certain amount of useful general information in the book most of the content does not apply to our climate and is therefore confusing. Forget it.

BOOKS FOR YOUNG READERS

PETER, PETER, PUMPKIN EATER, by James Reid (G. E. Welch, $2.75) is a brightly illustrated book for the very young, telling about a visit to a pumpkin farm where the youngsters choose the biggest pumpkin of all for their Halloween Jack o' Lantern, get a taste of cold apple cider at the farm, and enjoy pumpkin pie.

THE MOON PAINTERS (Macmillan, 148 pages, $6.25) is a real treasure for the young, and not so young. It is a book of 15 Estonian folk tales told by Selve Maas from the surprising rich and varied folklore of her native land.

There are tales of the earth's creation and of how the Great Spirit peopled the land with animals. There are tales of water and wood spirits, of monsters and magicians, of peasants, and princes. Some are full of mystery and awe of nature. Others are in the heroic tradition. Still others bubble over with humor and mischief.

During the 19th century, the gathering together of these stories and legends became a national task of the Estonian people. From this vast collection Selve Maas has chosen, translated, and edited the tales in this book. And Laszlo Gal has accompanied them with handsome illustrations that vigorously reflect the spirit of this tiny country on the Baltic Sea.

LIVING LANTERNS, LUMINESCENCE IN ANIMALS, written and illustrated by Hilda Simon, (Macmillan, 128 pages, $6.25) may be aimed at teen-agers, but it will interest readers of all ages who have a thirst for knowledge and an interest in Nature.

In the pages of this book appear the many forms of living things that glow with a cold light — animals that have fascinated man since ancient times. Its cast of creatures range from familiar fireflies, whose flashing lights illuminate the evening meadows in June, to the little known shining corals which live in the darkness of the ocean depths.

Among the light-producing animals explored in Living Lanterns are nonflying insects and other crawlers, such as worms, centipedes, and millipedes, and diverse marine organisms, including jellyfish, shrimps, squids and sharks.

The book also tells how the nature of bioluminescence was gradually revealed by research, and what aspects of the phenomenon still remain a mystery — a challenge for current and future research.

Hilda Simon's exquisite four-color drawings portray the luminescent animals in their natural habitats — many of them displayed against a dark background.

Luminescence in Animals covers an involved subject, but Hilda Simon tells the story so simply and interestingly that teen-agers will find it fascinating reading.

WOLF RUN, written and illustrated by James Houston, (Longman Canada, $4.25) is a caribou Eskimo tale and in this intensely moving and dramatic story the author-artist of Akavak: An Eskimo Journey and other outstanding books, conveys superbly the endurance of long suffering and the deep wells of determination and courage that rise up to overcome it.

Ill-fortune had first struck Punik's family when his father drowned the summer before. Now there was famine among them because the migrating herds of caribou they counted on each spring had not come, and there were only Punik and his grandfather to feed the women of the household.

Punik could send an arrow straight to its mark, and his grandfather had once been a clever hunter, but with no game to kill, their skills were useless.

In a last desperate effort, Punik departed from the camp to hunt for food, leaving the others to invoke, by chants and drumming, the magic that would bring caribou — a magic that Punik could not believe in.

Many days later he saw in the distance a dark moving line of animals that he knew were caribou, but they had come too late. By now Punik was too weakened by hunger and cold to attempt a kill or to protect himself from the snarling wolf waiting to attack him. And then, by a sudden turn of fate that brought in its wake new wisdom, Punik's life was saved.

James Houston knows his subject well and he uses his knowledge and his skill as both an artist and a writer to portray a vivid and authentic story.

He is also credited as the man who discovered Eskimo art and brought it to the attention of the world through the Canadian Handicraft Guild, the federal government and the Hudson's Bay Company.

THE MOTHER GOOSE COOK-BOOK, by Frances Sheridan Gessart (George J. McLeod, 28 pages, $4.95) is an uncommon cookery book, containing recipes for many dishes mentioned in the world's best known nursery rhymes. It is written for every child who ever asked: "What are curds and whey, anyway?" ... and for every mother who has searched in vain for the answer.

Historically accurate recipes for such treats as The Puffed Figs of Budleigh Friar, —ack-a-Dandy Kissing Candy, Peter Piper's Pickled Peppers, The Queen of Hearts' Furlined Tarts, and many others are included. Adapted for cooking in a modern kitchen, they retain all the character and charm of the original. Illustrations by Donald Hendricks complete the book and a full page picture and the applicable verse goes opposite each recipe, and there are 38 recipes.

LUCKY JIM'S GOLD MINE, by Terry Baker (Thomas Allen, 152 pages, $3.50) is an adventure book for teen-age boys, which was first published in 1963. This is a story of James Fraser's search for gold with his father in present-day British Columbia. Jim pursues his dream of locating the outcrop which his grandfather had noted on a prospecting trip many years before.

The objections of his mother, and many other people who believe that mining is just gambling, complicate Jim's attempts to decide whether luck or hard work determine success.

Jim has many adventures in the mountains while prospecting. He is given the nickname Lucky Jim after a final adventure which is more exciting than his wildest dreams. This is a great book for British Columbia youngsters to read.

Steaming Along At 64

The day was a warm spring Saturday in March of this year and the place was the Central Saanich farm of Willard Michell; the crowd of 75 people, including Mayor Galbraith and several aldermen of Central Saanich, anxiously awaited the moment of triumph for the hard-working members of the Saanich Historical Artifacts Society.

The display these people had been invited to watch was the actual firing of a 1907 Sawyer and Massey steam engine recently acquired by the society. None were more pleased with the performance of the engine than the engineer, Art Gardner of Sidney, who had taken night classes last winter to get his fourth class engineering ticket enabling him to run the machine.

Also on display were other recent acquisitions of the Society. Many, including the steam engine, were donations from the Deakin brothers of Mayne Island, whose generosity made this one of the most important donations to the Society's ever increasing collection of antique farm equipment.

Probably more important than the steam engine itself is the fact that they have been able to trace the ownership of this machine back through government inspection reports to the first report by inspector John D. Kay, at the E. G. Prior warehouse, Vancouver, B.C., on July 26, 1907.

Thus they have something unique with this antique engine, they know exactly who owned it and for how long, information that usually gets lost with the passing of time for many items.

For this first inspection a fee of $5 was paid by E. G. Prior Co. Ltd., and the owner is listed as Black Bros. of Sidney. The horse power of the engine is listed as 13 horsepower and the hydrostatic pressure tested out at 180 pounds. Working pressure was stated to be 120 pounds, and it was noted on the report that a fire box stay was bent and pressure reduced to 120 pounds on this account.

Also listed on this first report was the name of the first engineer of this engine, Henry Young, who owned the post office on what is now known as Mow's Hill, but which was then known as Young's Hill.

A second test on Aug. 11, 1908, when the engine was one year old, stated simply that the "general condition is good." The next inspection report on Aug. 1, 1909, showed a change of ownership from Jim Black of Sidney to William Deakin of Mayne Island. The Aug. 24, 1911, inspection report listed Jim Black as the engineer and apparently he remained so for many years.

The numerous reports for the following years were fairly routine and I will note just a few interesting points. The 1911 report for the

from the usual $5 and was only $3. The 1912 report stated that everything was in good condition and did not need another inspection until it was operated again. In 1915 it was noted that wet ashes had been left in the smoke box and corrosion had taken place there, but the boiler was reported in good condition. The first type-written report appeared in July, 1918, all the preceding ones having been carefully handwritten by the various inspectors.

The engine's final inspection before its recent one this March came in August, 1935, and was signed by inspector John D. Kay, who had made the first one at Prior's warehouse 28 years earlier. The owner was still William Deakin, but the engineer was now John Altken. Again the boiler was reported to be in good condition and further remarks were as follows: "Used only two days a year. Not been in actual use more than four months since it was built. Is well looked after."

Thus its active life, if one can call two days' work a year active, came to a halt and it remained on Mayne Island until brought over to Willard Michell's farm this winter. The members immediately began to work on reconditioning it, and the clean shiny steam engine operating this spring certainly didn't resemble the dull dirty machine that arrived several months earlier.

The inspection this March found the boiler tight under test, clean internally and in good condition. Despite its many years of idleness the boiler pressure checked out at 120 pounds, the same amount that was noted on the first report. It was noted that the engine would be used only about four days a year for display purposes. D. N. H. Grant was the signing inspector for this most recent report and as one may have guessed inflation has also taken its toll here too and the inspection fee is now 15.

Also on display from Mayne Island was a freshly painted democrat, a two-seater horse buggy, that was estimated to be between 75 and 100 years old. Of interest, too, was an old wooden hay bailer, probably one of the first type ever made. It looked like it would have been a very slow and involved procedure to produce a bale of hay but at least when it was bundled up the farmer got his money's worth for the bales were huge and must have weighed more than 200 pounds each.

More recently the Saanich Historical Artifacts Society has been lucky enough to have gained possession of an 1882 Monarch separator or thrashing machine. This particular machine is of specific interest to Willard Michell, for it was originally purchased by his grandfather, Thomas Michell. From there it was sold to Frank Lindsay in 1914, and he in turn sold it to the Sunset Seed Co., Saanich, in 1927. During this period it was used mainly to separate garden seeds, peas in particular. In 1942 it was sold to Ernie Galt who after many more years of use donated it to the Society.

In its prime it must have been an eye-catching machine for even today one can still see some of the beautiful pictures that were once painted on its sides. The farmers of yesteryear certainly believed in beauty as well as performance in their machinery. The acquisition of this thrasher is all the more important now, as it is made to run by steam power and with the steam engine operating, society members will now be able to demonstrate a thrashing operation with the two machines.

Many Victorians have probably already seen some of the aforementioned items as the steam engine was featured in the Victoria Day Parade and with several other items was also on display at the Mayfair Shopping Centre in May. The engine was again featured in the Sidney Day Parade, July 1, where it won a trophy.

Anyone who has seen this machine in operation will be amazed at how quiet running the engine is as for some reason its size seems to imply power and noise. Another feature not to be overlooked by environmentalists is the fact that there appears to be very little air pollution when in operation. We certainly aren't advocating a return to this type of machine for the present-day farmer, but it perhaps suggests that steam power should not be completely overlooked in our search for cleaner operating machines.

The steam engine will be operating at the North and South Saanich Agricultural Fair Sept. 4, 5 and 6, so how about stopping by to chat with engineer Art Gardner and other members of the Society as they fire the boilers up and demonstrate some of these antique machines.

theories) may remain vacant or empty, but usually the veins are filled with mineral matter.

North of Metcalf Bay the minerals have crystallized into glittering crystals of both white and smoky brown, some contain both types of crystals and are prized by collectors. One rock contained almost a square foot of crystallized surface.

Some weathered septarians have been occasionally mistaken for fossil turtles.

The beach between Metcalf Bay and Repulse Point is very broad, and there are private oyster beds here; the splashing of waves on the beach is slight, as the waters of Baynes Sound are well protected.

Crossing the beach, especially the wetter areas, the rustling sounds of hundreds of small crabs scuttling out of your way will drown out the cries of the few seagulls; but should you pass a group of rocks, the crabs make so much noise you'd swear to God that the rocks themselves were getting up to leave.

We'll be back though; the fossils are there — somewhere — and elsewhere on the island, inland, we were told of sandstone crevices and possible caves.

Mysteries like this are too strong a temptation to ignore.
